INDIA.

By way of Melbourne, H.M. war steamer Megara has brought news from Calcutta to the 12th of February, a brief outline of which appeared in a portion only of our issue yesterday morning.

We are indebted to our Melbourne contemporaries for the following particulars of the leading events in the disturbed districts, since the date of last advices, viz., 23rd January.

The most noteworthy event is the trial of the King of Delhi, which, although it had lasted five days, was still proceeding when the steamer sailed. It commenced on the 27th of January.

The system of flying columns was working extremely well. Several strong bodies of insurgents had been cut up or dispersed.

The troops of Jung Bahadoor, the Nepaulese Maharajah, had gained a great victory over the Rajah of Gondah.

The captured mutineers were being tried by drum-head court-martial.

Major-General Sir Hugh Rose with his Madrassee was at Sehore, and Sir Robert Hamilton was about to start for Saugor.

We have received (says the Bengal Hurkaru) the following for publication, from government message received by electric telegraph, from Allahabad, 8th February (Monday). The advanced Goorkhas attacked the enemy, 10,000 strong, under Rajah of Gondah, and defeated them, killing fifty, and totally dispersing the remainder. One artillery wagon captured. Our loss, one killed, two wounded. The Goorkha force will commence crossing the Gogra, near Tanda, on the 14th instant. We notice that the telegraphic communication between Shergolly and Benares is interrupted; there is little doubt but the mischief has been done by the rebels. A correspondent at Shergolly tells us that Ummer-Sing is still at Chotas-Ghur, and consequently quite near enough to the grand road to have it in his power to indulge in annoyances of this description.

A letter from an officer in Jung Bahadoor's force mentions that a party were to leave headquarters immediately to attack a village held by the insurgents, in which some of our officers from Faizanad had been murdered in July.

A letter dated Sehore, 14th January, contains the following:—The Bohal contingent had been disarmed. Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., arrived here on the 10th instant, and took command of the second brigade. There were a great many prisoners. Nearly 150 were shot by musketry on the 12th. Twelve were killed in an attempt to escape on Tuesday night. Ten more prisoners were executed yesterday. Drum-head court-martial is now sitting. There are some hundreds to try yet, all Indore mutineers.

The following telegram had been received at Calcutta, from Sir Robert Hamilton. Fort of Raturgh was evacuated during night of 28th January. Fazel Mahomed Khan was taken prisoner trying to escape, and is now going to be hanged over the gateway.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Futtehpore, January 30th:—"And now about the fight we had on the 27th. A lot of Mahomedan fanatics, with four guns, came and established themselves in a holy place about sixteen miles from this, up the river. Brigadier Hope, with ten guns, two thousand infantry, and some cavalry, were sent to wipe them away. We marched at ten o'clock at night from this, and arrived before the enemy's position at about eleven, as we had to halt to wait the closing up of a heavy fog. We found them in a very unmilitary position, from which, by a judicious application of cross fire, we soon dislodged them. Our cavalry pursued, and cut up a good number of them. We took their four guns, bivouacked for the night, and came back here on the 28th. Our loss would have been very small had it not been for the accidental explosions of captured ammunition, by which some twenty-four of our infantry men were very much injured."

The following is from Bhangulpore, dated the 31st January: "Everything is quiet here at present. Some disturbances, however, are said to have taken place in the Singhboom district, but we have no cause for alarm at this place. The local authorities, albeit, have recommended to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, that the temporary entertainment of the extra police and treasury guards should be extended for six months more."

The following is from a correspondent at Allahabad, dated February 8, 1858:—"Our gallant Commander-in-Chief, Sir Colin Campbell, arrived by train this evening. His Excellency, notwithstanding the sharp work he has had since he was last here, is looking remarkably well and hearty. The troops were drawn up at the station, and the moment Sir Colin placed his foot on the platform they came to the 'present arms.' The chief, however, seemed to think the parade unnecessary, for he trotted off, saying: 'That will do; don't mind me. Soldiers, you can go home; I know my way well enough.' It is not yet known how long he will remain here, but when he goes, it will be to teach the pandies that they require "a lang shankit spune to sup kail wi' the deil," as one of the Highlanders quaintly remarked.

A letter from Allahabad, 8th February, states:—"The advanced Goorkhas attacked the enemy, ten thousand strong, under the Rajah of Gondah, and defeated them, killing fifty, and totally dispersing the remainder. An artillery wagon captured: our loss one killed, and two wounded. The Goorka force will commence crossing the Gogra, near Tanda, on the 14th instant."

The following is an extract of a letter from Newra Grant, about 60 miles N.W. of the station of Goruckpore. The Tigra alluded to there is a village 14 miles from the same and in the same direction:—"Ere this you must have heard of the re-occupation of the Goruckpore by Jung Bahadoor and his force. We were then in Azimghur, but on hearing of it sight of us made a start, and got in quite safe via Gopalpore. The Nazim had not done much harm to the station, save making a sort of entrenchment round the magistrate's house, and uncoofing a few bungalows. The church, hospitals, gaols, bath, and catcheries were as good as the day we left them, minus panes of glass."

A correspondent at Cawnpore says:—"I think that about the latter end of this month you may look for the great blow to be struck. The chief is getting an enormous number of guns together, and rightly too, for that arm must chiefly be depended on in the coming struggle. From what I can learn it seems to me that ammunition cannot be obtained quite fast enough, and from experience Sir Colin knows that to chase the niggers out of Lucknow a large supply will be needed, and is not disposed to risk the chance of running short. Although there is a 'split in the cabinet' at Lucknow; although dissension is lessening the number of our foes daily, still there are quite enough sepoys left in Lucknow, and will be found there when we attack, to make it more than probable that we shall have some very heavy fighting. The case of the men now holding Lucknow is so desperate that it will be a second Sevindra Bagh on a greater scale, and 'quarta ad mori' will be the motto of the belligerents. There can be but little doubt that every day the rebels feel that the avenger is drawing nearer still. With nothing in their rear but the Terai; and east, west, and south a circle of remorseless foes closing gradually but surely upon them, they know that but one fate awaits them—death. Desperation will add to their courage and cunning, and there is little doubt that the highways and bye-ways of Lucknow will be studded with every offensive device that Oriental craft can bring against us, that every street will be barricaded, and every loopholed house or garden wall will teem with hidden foes ready to oppose our unshelterd troops to their fire would be both useless and senseless. There is sound policy in Sir Colin's waiting until he shall have got such an artillery force together as will, from its very weight of fire, drive them from their citadels. Once get them into the open, and, although they should outnumber us tenfold, the British bayonet and the Sikh tulwar will make short work of them."

A letter from Cawnpore, dated 29th January, states that they are greatly improving and enlarging the entrenched camp there, as some great attack is expected to take place in the neighbourhood of the entrenchment are being cleared away—a very necessary measure, for it was principally under their cover, and that of the buildings, that the Gwalior rascals were enabled to creep in so close to our position. It seems that another attack is anticipated, but from what quarter our correspondent says he not.

We subjoin General Outram's last despatch from the Alumbagh:—

"The Right Honorable the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct the publication of the following despatch from Major-General Sir James Outram, G.C.B., reporting the repulse of a large body of the enemy, who made an unsuccessful attack on his position on the 12th instant:—

"Camp Alumbagh, 12th January, 1858.

"Sir,—I have the honour to inform his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that the rebels of Lucknow attacked my position this morning, and were repulsed with considerable loss.

"In consequence of reports that Moosoob Allie was collecting men and receiving reinforcements from Lucknow to intercept my communications, I sent a stronger escort than usual with my convoy, now on its way from Cawnpore, consisting of 450 infantry, 4 guns, and 80 cavalry.

"The rebels were encouraged by this reduction of my force to meditate an attack, of which I received information for several days, and yesterday evening more definite accounts induced me to expect fire at sunrise this morning. I therefore made such dispositions of my force and outposts as were necessary, and troops breakfasted at daybreak and were all in readiness.

"About sunrise this morning large masses of the enemy were seen on my left front, and they gradually spread round the whole front and flanks of the position, extending from opposite to our left rear outpost to near Jellalabad on our right, a distance at least six miles, and numbering at the lowest estimate to 30,000 men.

"As soon as their movements were decidedly in advance, the brigades, the right mustering 743 and the left 733 Europeans and 100 men of the regiment of Ferozepore, were formed in front of their lines.

"The enemy first advanced upon my left front and flank, covered by a large body of skirmishers, on which I detached two regiments of the left brigade to support the outposts, and extended in skirmishing order on their flanks, whilst the third regiment was held in reserve; at the same time, Major Olpherts, with four horse battery guns, supported by a detachment of the military trains, was directed to check the enemy on my left rear, where their cavalry showed in the greatest strength. The volunteer and native cavalry were directed to protect the rear of the camp, which at this time appeared to be threatened.

"The right brigade remained on its ground.

"As soon as the enemy were fairly within range they were exposed to a severe fire of artillery from the Alum Bagh, and from the advanced batteries of my outposts on the left front and centre, and fled with the utmost precipitation, without having come within musket range, except at the left centre outposts, commanded by Captain Down, 1st Madras Fusiliers, where a considerable number entered a grove of trees usually occupied by our outlying picquets, from which they were driven in a few minutes by the skirmishers of the outpost.

"On the left rear Major Olpherts moved out his guns at a gallop, and advancing well to the front, opened upon the enemy, who had made a very large body of infantry and cavalry which was endeavouring to penetrate to our rear, turning them back towards the city, and doing much execution by the fire of his guns on their masses at 600 yards.

"At this time I received a report that Alum Bagh and my right advanced outpost of Jallalabad was threatened, and on proceeding to the right I found that the enemy had brought three horse artillery guns, supported by an immense mass of infantry, against picquet which connects my right with Jellalabad, and which had been strengthened to 100 men with two guns. I moved the regiment of Ferozepore and the 5th Fusiliers with two guns of Moir's bullock battery from the right brigade to the front, taking the enemy in flank and driving them back. They were then exposed to the fire of Maude's guns from Alum Bagh, which waved upon them with great effect.

About this time the enemy again advanced on the left front and flank, their cavalry on this occasion being more to the front than before. A party of the better galloper up to the rifle-pits in front of the left advanced outpost; but Alexander's and Clarke's guns opened on them and drove them back in confusion.

"About the same time the enemy on the right, again advancing from the heavy cover of groves and villages into which they had retreated, re-opened their guns on the Jallalabad picquet, but were finally silenced and driven off by the fire of Moir's two guns, which had been sent to the picquet to reinforce it, and replace the two guns originally there, which had been withdrawn to Jellalabad.

"Simultaneously with the attack above described, the enemy advanced upon Alum Bagh, and established themselves in the nearest cover, notwithstanding that they were seen to suffer severely from the artillery and rifle fire. About noon they also advanced into the open ground, and were immediately dispersed and driven back by the fire of Maude's guns and the rifle-pits from Alum Bagh.

"By six o'clock in the whole of the enemy had dispersed and retired to the city, to their original positions in the gardens and villages in our front.

"Nothing could exceed the eagerness of the troops to come in contact with the rebels, nor their disappointment at their precipitate flight to the cover of their works the moment the guns opened and our line of skirmishers advanced.

"The artillery made excellent practice on the masses of the enemy, and in reply to the fire from their batteries, which was maintained on our outposts and Alum Bagh with little intermission.

"The casualties amount to one officer slightly, three privates slightly, and two severely wounded.

"I take this opportunity of sending a return of casualties during the last fortnight, including to-day's.

"The steadiness of the troops, and the promptitude with which my orders were carried out by my officers, gives me every assurance that the enemy's attack, if it had been as formidable as their forces were numerous, would have been signally defeated.

I have, &c.,

"J. OUTRAM, Major-General, Commanding in Oude."

THE "WAR CORRESPONDENT" OF THE TIMES IN INDIA.

THE Bengal Hurkaru of 4th February, says:—The arrival of Mr. Russell, the Times Correspondent, has made a greater impression in this country than the arrival of a newspaper correspondent anywhere ever made before. Enthusiastic persons are of opinion that Mr. Russell will set everything to-rights by a series of vigorous letters, and that after a few piquant exposures of somebody or somebody, the country will return to a state of peace and tranquillity, never more to be disturbed. We have the highest and heartiest admiration for Mr. Russell's talents, and the most sincere respect for his judgment and honesty. But to expect of him so much more than could be possibly accomplished by any man under similar circumstances, is merely to disappoint his friends and damage his reputation. Mr. Russell is now on his way up to Allahabad, whence he will join the Camp of the Commander-in-Chief. His observations of scenery, manners, customs, and character, made on the road, will be vigorous and graphic. Should he be called upon to chronicle military operations, he will bring to bear upon the task the practical experience which he has acquired as well as the vivid insight which is essentially his own. His narrative will be always clear and comprehensive, and rapid, rattling, brilliant, eloquently exhilirating, and inspiring as opportunity is afforded by the occasion. He will fear neither to blame nor to praise, and will carefully and conscientiously strive to write the truth, and if not always the whole truth, nothing but the truth. In doing all this Mr. Russell will be performing a work in which he can have but few competitors, and which will sustain his reputation as one of the ablest men of the day. But beyond this it is idle to expect that Mr. Russell, with his slight acquaintance with the country, can do much. This gentleman has, we believe, been received with singular favour and distinction by the highest personage in this country, who has placed every facility for his progress through the province, at his disposal, and even, we are assured, all public documents bearing upon the questions which are likely to come under his review, the only desire of the authorities being publicity. All this must be very flattering and agreeable to Mr. Russell, who is thus afforded opportunities which no journalist in India has ever before enjoyed. But even these advantages cannot compensate for the want of practical experience, which India above all other countries requires for the comprehension of the great questions affecting her position and prosperity. Mr. Russell will doubtless be enabled to obtain a great deal of information in a shorter time and more direct manner than most persons, and he is just the man to make the most of whatever time or opportunity is afforded him. But he will find very soon that it is not so easy to learn India as some persons suppose. India is a country of nations, differing in language, creed, and even colour, about as much as the Eastern differs from the Western race. Without experience of these national features, and the thousand peculiarities of the country, it will be impossible to give a fair opinion upon the great questions concerning it, which the cleverest men who have ever been among us made the study of their lives. Mr. Russell will therefore have to be on his guard against a great deal of information which will be proffered to him from interested sources, against official documents placed at his disposal in which only one side of the question is set forth, against the thousand snares in fact, into which a man with a powerful pen and a high reputation may fall under the circumstances in which this gentleman is placed. He has a heavy responsibility resting upon him. His letters will be read by millions, and thousands will perhaps be influenced by them in their opinions upon the questions with which he has to deal. He should not therefore be lightly led away, and should remember that by any pliancy in this respect, he not only falls into a snare himself, but takes with him a large proportion of his countrymen.

THE TRIAL OF THE EX-KING OF DELHI.

THE papers to hand only give the proceedings of the third, fourth, and fifth days, and even these with great brevity. We quote from the Delhi Gazette of 3rd February.

THIRD DAY, 28TH JANUARY.

The prisoner was brought into court in a palanquin, attended by his Wukeel, Gholam Abbas and two servants; the intelligent youth, Jawan Bukht, having very properly received a hint to remain in confinement since the first day, owing to a certain "free and easy" manner assumed by him during the first day's trial, and observed by most people in court. Up to past twelve the Court was occupied in having read to the prisoner the vernacular of the translations read to the Court the day previous; a process not very interesting to the Court, and apparently for little moment to the prisoner, who, coiled up really upon his cushion, appeared lost in the land of dreams; and except when anything particular struck him, continued unmindful of what was passing around him. Occasionally, however, when a particular passage was read from any of the documents, the dull eye might be seen to light up, and the bowed head would be raised to catch every word, affect from which might be deduced in support of, or against, the argument of the utter debility assumed occasionally being real or feigned.

From some supplies made by Gholam Abbas, the prisoner's Wukeel, to the prosecutor, it became evident that, as he was present in the palace throughout the rebellion, he might be useful as a witness, and at the suggestion of the prosecutor he was accordingly produced and examined. As far as it went, this person's statement was, as might have been expected, favorable to the cause of his master, the prisoner, and consisted chiefly of a repetition of what we already know concerning the atrocities committed in Delhi on and after the 11th May by the rebel troops, and endeavours to impress upon the Court that the prisoner did all in his power to protect the late Mr. Fraser and Captain Douglas, even to seizing the latter by the hand, and restraining him from his purpose of going amongst the rebel troopers.

The Court closed its proceedings at four p.m., and adjourned till eleven a.m. of the following day.

FOURTH DAY, 30TH JANUARY.

The proceedings commenced with the continuation of the examination of Gholam Abbas, the prisoner's Wukeel. This proved to be a mere waste of time, the witness being one of the non mi ricordo class, determined to know nothing that could, by a recital, criminate the prisoner, his family, himself, or any one connected with the palace; and this soon became so apparent that he was twice or thrice reminded through the interpreter that he was giving his evidence upon oath. Nothing, however, was elicited from him, and he was permitted to resume his office of Wukeel to the prisoner, after being subjected to a rigid cross-examination by the Government prosecutor, Major Harriott.

The prosecutor then proposed that the petitions of the late Rajah of Ballubgurh, which were translated and read at the trial of that rebel, be accepted as evidence, which being agreed to, he proceeded to read to the court the English translations; and on these being concluded the interpreter read the originals for the benefit of the prisoner, who up to this time had been sleeping. He was roused for the purpose, and appeared to listen attentively, making some remark at the conclusion of each, and indicating by signs during the reading that he knew nothing whatever about them! He appeared in much better health and humour than on any of the previous days, and laughed in great spirits as each successive paper was taken up to be read, as if quite amused at there being so many.

At 2 p.m. the Court adjourned for a quarter of an hour, when the prisoner had a pull at his hookah; after which the reading of the documents in the original was resumed, and lasted till 4 p.m., when the Court adjourned till 11 o'clock on Monday.

It is perhaps not a very remarkable fact, that of the many native witnesses whose evidence had been taken against the ex-king, not one has deposed that he knew of the presence of any Europeans whatever in the palace. The atrocities committed there, and probably perpetrated by the very villains who deny all knowledge of them, were, according to their statements, given on oath, only heard of by them, and no traces of the fearful deeds were left to tell the tale.

FIFTH DAY, 1ST FEBRUARY.

The trial was resumed this morning. The prisoner was, to all appearance, not so well as on Saturday. He scarcely noticed the proceedings, but lay coiled up upon his couch, apparently asleep, from which state he was roused whenever it was absolutely necessary for him to listen to any document about to be read.

Up to nearly half-past one o'clock the Court was occupied in reading documents in the vernacular translations, which had been disposed of, the translations of the military papers were read, and afforded considerable amusement to the Court. These consisted chiefly of petitions from "the Lord Sahib, Mirza Mogul, Commander in Chief of the Royal army," Bukht Khan Bahadur, and other rank traitors, upon various subjects. In some the helpless state of the "infidels" was set forth in the most glowing terms, pointing out how, with very slight assistance and delay, they would be sent to a place, which even Mohammedan murderers are never to see, others pointing out how certain districts had been brought under the "Royal rule" and treasure too, by the revolt of those whose duty it was to guard its safety; while all were full of hatred to the "infidels," and unbounded love for the faithful rebels. Some of these appearance would have excited laughter, but for the fearful atrocities perpetrated by his sanction. To most of these documents the prisoner's autograph order and signature in pencil is attached, and in no single instance is it in opposition to the fearful desire of the rebel army to exterminate the British.

At 2 p.m. the Court adjourned for a quarter of an hour, and at the expiration of that time resumed its sitting, when the reading of the translations was concluded, and the originals in the vernacular commenced and continued till the usual time of adjournment—5 p.m.

A professional artist was in attendance making a sketch of the prisoner, as he lay on his couch.

"THE ILLUSTRIOUS DEAD!"

At a public meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, called to do honour to the memory of Generals Neill, Havelock, and Nicholson, it was unanimously carried, "That a subscription be opened for the purpose of erecting in Calcutta a suitable monument to the memory of Generals Havelock, Neill, and Nicholson, and their brave companions in arms, who fell nobly in the service of their country during the siege of Delhi, and the defence and relief of Lucknow." This was one of many resolutions. From the Hurkaru's report we extract the following beautiful tribute, which was uttered by Mr. Ritchie, the mover of the above:—

"The deaths of each of the distinguished men whose services we are met specially to celebrate, deeply as we mourn them, carry with them much of comfort as much of glory. Each did his appointed work on earth, and each did that work so well that it were sin to say that his life was incomplete; nay, we may say that his life would have been incomplete had it not been followed by such a death. Look at the death of the glorious Neill. He fell pressing through a gateway at Lucknow thronged with the dead, the dying, and the advancing hosts of the British avengers of blood, at the head of his own beloved regiment, and with everything to urge the warriors onwards, and to make a moment's pause as repugnant to his nature as it was perilous, and yet the hero paused on his onward course, and that pause, exposing him to steady, murderous aim, from behind the treacherous loophole, cost his precious life. But he paused not for work of slaughter, but for a work of mercy—not to strike down a foeman, but moisten from his own flask the lips of a poor private, who had sunk wounded or exhausted by his side. We all remember that beautiful story, dear to us from our childhood, of Sir Philip Sidney, when dying on the field of Zutuphen, waiving from him the cup of cold water that was offered to him with the words: "Give it to that poor man; his necessity is greater than mine." That deed of the Christian warrior is and ever will be unsurpassed, but last now equalled! Was not the entirely self-lovely, the self-denial, as sublime, although not stay the advancing footsteps of the fiery Neill, eager to avenge his slaughtered countrymen and countrywomen, that he might succour his poor, faithful, simple hearted follower as those which animated even the noble Sidney? And when after we are gone our children's children shall be taught the last words of the gentlewarrior, at Zutuphen, shall they not also read with glowing hearts and moistened eyes of the undaunted Neill dying at Lucknow? Then, turn we to the death of the heroic Nicholson. He fell a youth in years, a veteran in the wisdom of his counsels, in the multitude of his campaigns, in the strength of his achievements. He fell as a soldier would wish to fall, at the head of his gallant troops, with the shout of victory in his ears; but long after he fell mortally wounded, he resisted being carried to the rear, and remained heedless of the agony of his wounds, heedless of the shadows of death closing around him, to animate his troops, checked—but only for a while, in their advance by the loss of such a leader. Was not such a death worthy of such a life? And will not the Cabul Gate, where he fell, as his gallant comrade has told us with such feeling, live in future British story as live those heights of Abraham on which there fell, a century ago, another youthful hero, the immortal Wolfe, like him in the number of his years, like him in his noble qualities and aptitude for command, like him in the love and confidence he inspired in all around him, and like him in the wail of sorrow with which his death marred the joy of the nation in the hour of victory? As to the gallant Havelock, the privilege of a soldier's death on the actual field of battle was denied him. But never, probably, did a soldier meet, or wish to meet, from comrade a nobler, simpler, truer epitaph than that which our beloved friend Outram (for so I am sure he would wish us to call him, and who still, thank God, lives to receive our thanks,) who has so well been called by Mr. Cochrane, the generous, noble hearted Outram, wrote of his friend, "Worn out by toil and exposure," so runs the despatch, "he lived long enough to witness the end for which he had fought so nobly, and to receive the valued token of his sovereign's approbation. But what a blessing, and considering all that he went through, providential that he should have lived so long? May we not say without profaneness or irreverence that he who in the days of old preserved His apostles through perils of the heathen, perils of false brethren, perils of the wilderness, in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in fastings often, in hunger and thirst, until His work was done, preserved also by means as providential and well nigh as marvellous, through perils well nigh as appalling, the modern soldier of the cross, the champion of civilisation, the servant apostle of the cause of humanity, upon his mission of deliverance to the captives, of light to those that lay in the shadow of darkness, of life to those that seemed appointed to die? And when he, thus marvellously preserved, had finished the good work set before him, lively you not that he too could exclaim, 'I am now ready to be offered up; to depart. I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith?" With such thoughts as these methinks, we the Christian countrymen of Havelock and of Neill and Nicholson console ourselves for the loss of our heroes in the hour of their triumph. For us the keen and bitter disappointment; the monument of woe; the funereal cypress. For them, the hero's triumph, the patriot's reward, the martyr's palm. The man who dare not recognise the hand of God going forth with our armies, guiding and sustaining our leaders, animating our troops in their advance against the votaries of worse idols than Belial, or Moloch, or Chemos; against the murderers of Christian women and women, and of those little ones for whom we know our heavenly Master careth, and upon the offenders against whom he has denounced a fearful doom, would not, methinks, awake from his slumber if one were to rise from the dead to tell him it was so.

REVOLUTION IN THE CHURCH.

(From the British Standard.)

THE heading of this article indicates the views of the High Party in so far as they are represented by Mr. Beresford Hope, relative to the work of the Church among the millions. Nothing will satisfy him but a thorough revision of the constitution and a radical alteration of the policy of the Church of England. The parochial system is effete, useless, and wholly inadequate to meet the pressing necessities of the case. The Church has lost ground by relying on it; and, therefore, as the remedy, the only step is the immediate abdication of its exclusive rights. It must recover the advantages it has forfeited, not by drawing tighter the reins of the present system, not by multiplying small, ill-paid curates, or "encouraging the spasmodic efforts of the delegates of Volunteer Committees." Every town of above a certain cypher of population ought to have its one head clergyman, who should preside over the evangelisation of the whole community. "There is a name," he adds, "1800 years old for such head clergyman, and it stands to reason that he had better assume it, and be entitled Bishop."

Such is the scheme which the honorable member proposes; and its effect, our readers need hardly be told, would be to overthrow entirely the present system of the Church of England. Mr. Hope is no Radical; he is a Conservative in politics, and the principles which he otherwise holds, partake of the same hue. His idea is a long standing one—a conviction, forced upon him by a variety of circumstances, not the least of which was Mr. Spurgeon's crowded "following," the counter move at Exeter Hall, Mr. Edouart's prohibition, and the consequent opening of Westminster Abbey, and the bill of Lord Shaftesbury."

The tone of Mr. Hope is moderate; he does not abuse the Evangelical section of the Church of England, nor does he praise his own party at their expense, but he deprecates that either the peer, or the dignitary of the Church should be left to do the work single handed. The bill before the House does not solve the problem; he declares the issue fully—either the Church is fit to do the work, or it is not. He believes that it is, and states his plan.

Mr. Hope, in effect, denies that his proposal is at all revolutionary; it is simply returning to the pattern of early Christendom, to that system which was Alexandria, Antioch, and Rome, to the faith of the crucified. The honorable gentleman adduces an argument in favour of his plan, from the fact that the Church is Episcopal and Established. The former attribute, concentrates the staff who regulate, and that main body for whose welfare the staff itself exists, into certain groups called dioceses, under a head called Bishop, the modification of the Greek word for overseer. Thus the episcopal aspect of the Church is that of aggregation. But it is also established; and a main characteristic of this establishment is, that it distributes the population of a "county" into respectively of certain freehold rights (regulated on the general principles of all real property), over the spiritual concerns of definite circumscriptions, called parishes.

Mr. Hope is apparently oblivious to the fact, that this is the very reason why his plan, is the present phase of the establishment, is his impossibility. His subsequent conclusion, that "the establishment phase of the Church is, therefore, disjunctive," is incoherent. These two characteristics are the leading features of the Church of England. Although Mr. Hope arrives at the definite conclusions which we stated at the outset, he is by no means clear as to the process by which he arrives at them. He is intent on making every large town a bishoprick, and establishing in the smaller ones of what are known as "missions" among the Tractarians. Every parish is to have its "Bishop," with a staff of clergy, a primitive usage. Mr. Hope objects to the present office of Bishop, inasmuch as temporal dignity results in a loss of spiritual perfection.

The scheme, if somewhat monastic, is characterised by unity. He contends that the towns would exhibit the high-pressure activity which co-operation always produces, on the ministering, and yet mitigated by his staff of coadjutors; some adapted to and great in one branch of the clerical office—others in another; this man a stirring preacher in the Church—that one persuasive in the house of mourning or of sin; the third a careful and wise steward of the charities intrusted to their ministrations; the fourth the patient and winning instructor of youth.

Mr. Hope has either lived before his time, or after; a day may come when the world will hear him, but it will not now. The stringent nature of the Episcopate, the forced hard work, the absolute control, in fact, the whole machine character of the scheme would, we are inclined to think, but ill suit the taste of modern society. Were the question really as to a radical change in the organisation of the Church, were that great body about to begin de novo, it must be matter for consideration among the many other schemes to which such a proposition would give rise. But now, the minds of men are fixed, and it must be improved by partial legislation. Take what can be got, in hope of future instalments, must be the motto. To change the constitution of the Church would indeed be revolutionary, even if possible, extended as it is all over the land, and with all its ramifications of patronage. To obtain the consent of the incumbents and rectors, some of whom hold their livings in their own right, would be no mean task; and how to deal with dissentients, would be a problem. The habits of the clergy are fixed; and really, save in form, we see but little real effective good to be derived from so sweeping an innovation. As at present organized, the clergy are, at least to some extent, their own masters; but here all actual liberty would be taken from them. In addition to this, the clergy of the present day are not condemned to celibacy, and, therefore, the scheme here propounded might prove inconvenient, especially if Mr. Hope intends the plan pursued in connection with some of the Tractarian churches to be carried out. We could specify one church in which all the "priests" live together in two houses. The floors have no carpets; their meals are eaten from tables on which no cloth is spread; the walls are adorned with crosses and pictures, such as are customarily hung in places of worship. Such a style of things will not suit the mind of the average incumbent. Samuel of Oxford would prefer Cuddesden Palace to the leadership of one of these proposed monastic conventicles. But even were the plan ever so complete, the minutiæ could never be harmonised; obstacles insuperable would arise which not even the most zealous and earnest propagandist could overcome. The scheme, in a modified and isolated form, has been weighed in the balances, and found wanting. Dr. Hook, of Leeds, many years ago, gave up the vicarage of that town, and placed all the subordinate churches and chapels under his control, the town being divided into new parishes. But the experiment was a failure. So it must be henceforth; the tendency of increased power, on the one hand, might not unlikely lead to spiritual tyranny, and subordinate apathy on the other. The surest way to interest a man in any species of work is to awaken in him a sense of responsibility, and excite a feeling, that if good be not accomplished, the blame lies at his own door. The scheme would degenerate into centralized tyranny, and be productive of little else than internal discord and gloomy misanthropy.

POISONOUS PICKLES.

To the Editor of the Sydney Morning Herald.

SIR,—Many of your readers are, doubtless, aware of "Analytical Sanitary Commission" established, some time ago in London, by the Editor of the Lancet.

I have reason to doubt, however, whether the beneficial results of the detection and exposure of the extensive adulterations of articles of food, resulting therefrom, have extended to similar articles imported into the colonies. I have long intended to take up the examination of this subject, and, as I before mentioned, have commissioned a friend to procure for me a microscope, for that purpose, with which I expect will shortly arrive.

In the meantime, I wish, through the medium of your columns, to point out a specimen of adulteration of which I have already detected, and which any one may very easily, and by the help of a very simple test, ascertain for himself. I mean the pickles, which I am about to state—the subject having been long known and frequently brought under the notice of the public; but such is the power of habit, or prepossessing these matters, that any process involving the smallest possible amount of trouble is seldom adopted. It is high time, however, that something should be done. It is bad enough to be cheated; but to be cheated and poisoned as well is too bad.

It has long been known that for the purpose of giving a bright green colour to pickles copper is used. I need not inform your readers that the various forms of this metal are highly injurious, and even dangerous, and that fatal results have occurred from their use in articles of diet.

Pickles, even when properly prepared, are not very digestible, and, therefore, seldom find a place at my table.

A bottle of "mixed pickles" was, however, a few days ago placed before me, which, from its taste, appearance, and some experiments, induced me to use of my family, I was induced to test. I accordingly poured off a small phial of the vinegar, into which I introduced a small piece of bright iron wire. In three or four hours the wire exhibited a complete coating of copper, showing that that metal was present in most injurious amount.

For obvious reasons I abstain, at present, from publishing the name and address of the tradesman from whom this bottle was bought; but as there is, doubtless, more of the same kind in the market, I think, I shall be doing only my duty of putting the public on their guard by giving the name and address of the professed maker of the article.

On one side of the bottle was a coloured label, bearing the following inscription:—"Mixed Pickles. Régon Pétres, R. Tullard and Co., and H. Jaborsky, Bordeaux." On the other side was another label in blue and silver, with medallions of the Emperor and Empress of the French, and a long inscription laudatory of the artistic merit of the pickles.

These, therefore, who hereafter may be incautious enough to purchase pickles, so distinguished, will know what to expect.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH RAILWAYS.

THE following most interesting paper (says the Times,) was read at the Institution of Civil Engineers, on the 12th of January, by Mr. Joseph Locke, M.P., President of the Institution. He said,—:

"He proposed to confine his observations to one portion of professional duties with which circumstances had induced personal experience—the principles and character of the French railway system; and this he was encouraged to attempt in consequence of the late president, Mr. Robert Stephenson, having so fully discussed the main features of English railways, the origin, progress, and results of which were in many respects strikingly dissimilar from those of the Continent. The practical results in England had been immense convenience and advantage to the public who used, and inadequate profit to those who had constructed, the railways; but in France the returns were usurer, the capital invested yielding a good profit, while the service to the public, although far in advance of all former means of conveyance, was still very limited. In contrasting the systems, it would be shown that the real difference was greater than was apparent on a mere comparison of per centage of income and profit; and that, of other things being equal, the advantage might be assumed to be in favour of England in all that was essential to the success of improved communication; and, all circumstances being considered, the result should have been a higher rate of profit from railways in England than in France. The essential characteristics of the French system were, first, the determination by the State of the locality and direction of the main arterial lines of railway; and secondly, the process which the State, while adhering to its general rule of absolute control over the selection of lines, had thought proper to employ in order to obtain the desired progress in their construction. The terms of concession had undergone great variation at different periods of the French railway history, but the system had been invariably sustained by the conservative operation of the ruling principle, and it was this which had given to the French system the main advantage over the more liberal course pursued in England. In the former case the State absolutely determined the lines, favouring exclusively main arterial communications, and forbidding competition within special districts, while in the latter case the principles of competition had been not only admitted, but encouraged, with ruinous results to the shareholders. In the first projection of a line in France, the English system of parliamentary notices, deposit of plans, standing orders, committees, examinations, &c., were entirely dispensed with. The Government took the initiative in everything relating to public works. All railways must originate with or be sanctioned by the State, and when a Ministerial decision was pronounced in favour of the "public utility" of any line, the Minister of Public Works was authorised to satisfy himself of the bona fides and ability of the several competitors, to select the most eligible offer and to enter into a preliminary treaty, which, when approved by the Government and the Chamber or Senate, was ultimately signed by the Emperor and became law. The cahier des charges, fixing the conditions of the concession and the powers of the company, was settled at the same time. The Government furnished such plans, sections, and other data relative to the line as were in its possession, and the railway was then laid out. The cahier des charges allowed considerable latitude in the selection of the line. The preliminary survey, or avant projet, containing a general description of the line, with details of the curves, gradients, &c., was presented by the company to the Minister of Public Works, who, after consulting with the Conseil des Ponts et Chaussées, signified his approval through the Prefet to the company. Meanwhile plans and references were prepared for each commune or parish, showing how the roads, rivers, &c., were proposed to be crossed or deviated, which, being sent to the Prefet, were by him communicated to the mayors of the communes. Their receipt was notified on the doors of the church and of the Mairie, and by the beat of drum, and they remained during eight days for inspection by all who were interested. A process-verbal was then drawn up of all objections for submission to the Prefet, by whom a commission was named, composed of members of the Conseil-General of the Department, the mayors of the communes interested, and the engineer of the company. The report from this commission was sent by the Prefet to the Government engineers appointed to report on the nature and utility of the works, and to superintend the fulfilment of the clauses of the concession. The report of these engineers being then sent, with all plans, &c., to the Minister of Public Works, his final decision was obtained. The Prefet then made his arrete de cessibilite, declaring transferrable for public utility the parcels of land marked for expropriation. The Procureur Imperial of the civil court of each district then required from the Tribunal orders of expropriation. The civil tribunal examined whether all the formalities had been rigorously fulfilled, decreed the expropriation, and from that moment all the houses, land, &c., became the property of the company, by whom the amount of indemnity settled by agreement or by jury must be paid. The time occupied in these preliminaries varied from six to twelve months, but although tedious the process was not expensive, and it enabled the company from the doubtful and onerous charge to companies in England of getting a bill through Parliament at a cost which ever after remained a dead weight on the company. The first railway concession granted in France was in 1823, for a line 12 miles in length, from coal-pits near St. Etienne to Andrezieux, on the Loire; in 1826 and 1828 other lines from the same district to Roanne and to Lyons were granted; these were all constructed entirely at the expense of the promoters. In 1838 the lines from Strasbourg to Bale, Paris to Havre, Paris to Orleans, and Lille to Dunkerque, were conceded to private companies but the funds not being provided, the concessions partially lapsed. In 1842 a law was passed authorizing the State to construct the railways up to 'formation level,' and to let for a term of years the working of the lines to companies who would provide the permanent way, engines, and rolling stock. This had the effect of giving considerable impulse to the railway system, and induced the importation of foreign capital. The law was subsequently modified by the State granting 'subventions' of money, instead of constructing the earthworks, &c. Up to 1842 the concessions granted were under 800 miles, but in that year alone upwards of 1400 miles were sanctioned. Among these were—Paris to Lille and Valenciennes, Rouen to Havre, Paris to Strasbourg, Paris to Lyons, Avignon to Marseilles, Orleans Vierzon, Vierzon and Bourges, Orleans to Bordeaux. Nearly all the concessions since 1842 had been based on the law of that year, or were in the modified form of giving a 'subvention' in lieu of works, with a minimum guaranteed interest of four per cent. and an extension of term to 99 years. To this combination of pecuniary aid, with a guarantee of interest, may be ascribed the rapid increase in the development of the French railway system since 1842. It was remarkable that this timely aid granted by the State had been thoroughly successful, and in no case had the guarantee for interest ever been claimed; thus the object had been completely fulfilled without any loss to the State. The financial condition of the French railways was exhibited in the following table:

	£	£	Miles.	Miles.
From 1823 to 1842 ...	7,500,000	150,000	350	1158
" 1843 to 1847 ...	17,000,000	2,000,000	1000
" 1848 to 1851 ...	8,000,000	12,000,000	1000
" 1852 to 1856 ...	28,240,000	7,840,000	2770	2900
" 1857 to 1858 ...	23,320,000	1,200,000	1833	4300
	86,120,000	23,440,000
Still to complete ...	41,380,000	5,200,000
	127,500,000	28,640,000
	156,000,000
Total ...	172,400,000

The total cost, therefore, of the 7030 miles conceded was estimated at about £24,600 per mile, of which £19,600 was to be provided by the companies, and £5000 by the State. What the actual cost would ultimately be was not yet ascertainable. The fluctuations in the amount granted at different periods by the State were shown to have arisen from the necessary modifications of the law, the abandoning the revenionary interest in the railways, the guaranteeing 4 per cent. interest, and the remission of the right to a share in the profits after a certain dividend had been paid. The capital guaranteed by the State had, in 1855, reached nearly 60,000,000, applicable chiefly to six principal lines, of an aggregate length of 5200 miles. The right of participation, which had originally applied to nearly all the railways founded on the law of 1842, had been generally abandoned; so that it now only applied to five companies, owning 3500 miles of railway. Thus it was shown that from the cost of government the railways had in some shape always received a certain amount of direct assistance from the State, in addition to the protection afforded while exercising a general principle of control. The most important element in the finance of French railways was the proportion which the share capital bore to the amount raised on obligations, or bonds. In this respect the French system differed essentially from that of the English companies. In the whole of the capital engaged to be provided by the French companies, amounting in 1856 to £137,980,000, there was then £56,000,000 in shares, or only about 37 per cent.; while the remaining 63 per cent. had to be raised on obligations or bonds. Of this several marked instances were given. The effect of this mode of providing the funds was evident on examining the net receipts of the French railways, from 1841 to 1854, and the per centage of dividend which had resulted. The per centage paid on the whole capital expended in 1841 was 3·11 per cent.; in 1847 it was 6.30 per cent.; in 1854 it was 6.58 per cent. By the operation of subventions the rate paid to the companies in 1841 was 3.11 per cent., in 1847 it was 7.17 per cent. In 1854, 9.0 per cent.; thus the State assistance at the latter period gave a benefit of 2.42 per cent. on the whole of the remaining capital. The largest amount of that capital was, however, raised on loan at a fixed rate of interest, and thus, according as the dividend on the whole capital varied from the interest paid to the bondholders, a profit or a loss would accrue to the company. In order, then, to a just comparison with English railways, the per centage of net income must, in both cases, be taken on the whole capital raised, by which the per centage would be considerably reduced on the French side and raised on the English, the rate of interest on loans being taken at 5 per cent. on both sides. It followed, then, that it depended on the rate of profit to the whole capital expended whether any portion of it, raised by loans at a fixed rate of interest, would increase or lower the rate of dividend on the remaining portion. Taking two railways, each having cost a million; one producing a net profit of 4 per cent. and the other of 8 per cent., if the first had borrowed half its capital at 5 per cent., the sum left for dividend on the half million in shares was reduced to £15,000, or 3 per cent., while the second, by also borrowing half its capital at 5 per cent. would raise its dividend on its half million in shares to £55,000 or 11 per cent. Assuming the same premises, and the limitation of borrowing to be about one-third of the capital, as in England, and in the other case two-thirds, as in France, the operation would be that in the former the share dividend would be reduced to 2½ per cent., and in the latter case it would be raised to 14 per cent. It thus appeared that the decisive element in both was the ratio of net profit to the whole capital spent in a given undertaking; and that the reason of French dividends being augmented by borrowing so largely was solely because the rate of profit earned on the entire cost was in excess of the current rate of interest, while the dividends on English railways were impaired by the same process, because the conditions were reversed. It was estimated that the profit realised by French companies, from their system of borrowing at largely amounted to upwards of 3 per cent. on the whole of their share capital; and the fact was instanced that, as between 1854 and 1857, the average annual dividends paid by some railways were:—The Nord, 14 per cent.; L'Est, 14 per cent.; L'Ouest, 10 per cent.; Paris to Lyons, 16 per cent.; Orleans, 12 per cent.; Lyons to the Mediterranean in 1855, 17 per cent., and in 1857, 23 per cent. The system of gradually extinguishing the capital by amortissement, spreading it over 99 years at the rate of about one-eighth or one fourth per cent., was then described. The final result of the comparative examination was, although the true scale of profits on French railways was not quite so high as had been represented, it still was greater than was exhibited by English lines. A comparison of the expense of construction of the French and English railways exhibited an unfavourable picture of the latter, the estimated cost of the former being about £34,688 per mile, while that of the latter was about £31,690 per mile. The causes which tended to swell the expences of English railways had been fully stated by Mr. Robert Stephenson, the late president, in his address from the chair; from many of them, such as the Parliamentary proceedings, and the effects of the rivalry of other lines in the respective districts, the French railways were exempted. The physical features of the country, rendering for the most part unnecessary the viaducts, tunnels, and other expensive works, which distinguished the English railways, contributed also much to reduce the cost of construction. One fertile source of expense in England had been the duplication of lines and stations in many of the large towns, and the premiums paid by timid directors to projectors of rival lines, in order to buy up and extinguish opposition. Of this several glaring instances were given in the cases of the Trent Valley, the Leeds and Bradford, the Oxford and Birmingham, the Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, the Richmond, and other railways. If to these causes were added the exactions of landowners, and the enormous expenses Parliamentary inquiries, the dead weight of primary debt on the English lines could be easily accounted for, and from all those the French lines were exempted. The cost of railways would probably be diminished in future in England, while in France they had not yet reached the culminating point, as between the years 1841 and 1854 the cost had gradually increased from £18,600 per mile to £26,564 per mile. In return for its aid and protection from rivalry, the French Government had secured the gratuitous conveyance of the mails, and had laid a tax of 10 per cent. on passengers and on first-class goods, which two items yielded 5 per cent. on the sum of £36,000,000 of subventions. Low tariffs were also fixed for soldiers, sailors, prisoners, paupers, &c.—participation, in some cases, after certain divisions of profits—and the possession, at the end of the concessions, of all the railways in France. After these considerations the question of the system appeared to have reconciled the interests both of the promoters and of the State, as, while the former had obtained a liberal return for their outlay, the latter had secured substantial public benefits for the aid they had given; in short, the railway interest in France had not, as in England, been made a victim of public exigencies and of private cupidity. The limited service for the public on the French lines was then noticed, and it was shown that, as compared with the English system, it was deficient. This induced economy, and influenced the profits, but still the cost of fuel, and of all that belonged to the locomotive power, was greater than in England. Referring to the absolute engineer construction of French railways, there was little to occupy attention, as they were almost entirely imitations of those which had been already completed in England, where the experiments were tried, and where both the engineers and the operatives had to acquire their experience practically. Several instances were given by the President of his own personal experience in the construction and maintenance of French railways. He found it at the beginning indispensable to secure the co-operation of experienced contractors, and this induced the introduction by Messrs. Brassey and M'Kenzie of the machinery and skilled labour at their command, in order eventually to instruct others in similar works. The success which attended their efforts, particularly those of Mr. Brassey, was shown by the fact that in nearly every part of the globe, fully justified the importation of Englishmen to France for the intended purposes. One of the most striking consequences was the introduction of the class of "navvies," whose appearance, habits, manners, and mode of work were usually new to the French; yet they soon became perfectly at home, and inspired such confidence among the native labourers that they would not undertake any task-work unless the gang was headed by a "navvie." The force of the example of these men was now manifest in the improved style of work on the French lines, so that there was now little, if any, difference in the relative values of the labour obtained from each. Thus the introduction of English labour, far from being a grievance, as was assumed, had, as previously in the case of the iron trade and machinery manufacture, considerably improved the condition of the French working class. In 1840 there was no important establishment where the locomotives could be made or even repaired; this induced Mr. Locke to construct workshops at Rouen, and in this he engaged the assistance of Mr. Cavé, superintendent of the Paris and Rouen Railway, and subsequently agreed to repair and maintain them at a fixed rate per kilomètre. The experiment was eminently successful; Mr. Locke's operations had been extended to other lines, with great credit to himself and advantage to the railway companies. Large manufactories of engines had since been created, equal to the supply of the wants of the country, and English mechanics were now generally employed by other than the Rouen Railway. Neither the precision of manufacture nor of manipulation had, however, yet reached the English standard; nor had the economy of working been brought so low, notwithstanding the speed being lower, the wages being less, and the trains less frequent, better filled, and carrying a heavier weight. In absolute construction there was little to remark. The masonry was more lavish in quantity; the slopes of cuttings were not flat enough, and were frequently pitched with stone; the rails were chiefly the double-headed parallel, and were used on the transverse sleepers in England; the gauge was identical with the English standard, and uniform throughout the country: and the permanent way generally differed but little from the majority of the British lines. One national peculiarity was the employment of women in the booking offices, level crossings, &c., and other departments, to the duties of which they were found well adapted. In the conduct of works there was a manifest difference between the proceedings of the English and the French engineers; the former personally examined the ground throughout, planned the works, superintended the execution, constantly inspected the progress, determined every proceeding, met every difficulty, and assumed the responsibility of the entire works. The French practice was in many cases the reverse; the engineer devised his schemes in his study, relying upon the reports and surveys supplied by his Government departments, or his own subordinates, upon whose information he continued to rely, and to advise rather than to direct, even in cases of exigency. The system, commencing with the chief, descended through all grades, each dependent on some degree upon his superior or subordinate, so that the chief frequently acted upon information really originating with subalterns possessing very moderate qualifications. There was in this a great appearance of organization,—on paper it was methodical and imposing,—but it could hardly be deemed an efficient system for less than more or more direct process of individual supervision, by which the engineer was brought into personal relation with the difficulties with which he has to contend and the forces he has to wield. Another peculiarity of the continental system was the detrimental influence exercised by the Government engineers of the Ponts et Chaussées as contrôleurs whose presence affected the railway system, by their frequent demands or suggestions, which, although of no legal force, were generally submitted to. The President bore testimony to the consideration with which he had been individually treated in his continental undertakings, but even that could not blind him to the defects of the system. In summing up, it was observed, that the difference in estimated cost per mile of the lines hitherto conceded, or made in France, as compared with those in England, might be taken at £5000 to £7000. To this must be added in the French promoter's favour the £5000 per mile furnished by the State. If, however, from the English rate were taken the outlay solely due to disadvantages from which the French were exempted, the difference in favour of the latter, making every allowance for the more even surface of their country, would be considerably reduced. A map of the French railways showed them nearly all to be in the nature of leading communications; each serving an important district, and itself free from the pressure of competing rivals. The advantage of the French system really consisted more in the class of lines on which the money had been spent, and in the assistance given in raising that money, than in the cost per mile at which the railways had been made. These were the two cardinal points on which the greater prosperity of the system turned; for, in reality, there were not any special circumstances, excepting giving a more limited amount of accommodation to the public, that would explain its superiority; and that exception was perhaps balanced by the greater cost of working supplies, the higher passenger tax, the 10 per cent. rate on a portion of the merchandise receipts, and the conveyance of mails, &c., gratis. In short, it appeared that the real source of the present good fortune of the French railways lay in the favourable treatment they received from the State. The French Government certainly did strongly control the railways, but they also liberally fostered that kind of enterprise; while the English legislature, unable to guide, had suffered, if not encouraged, hostile or selfish interests to encumber and pervert the legitimate objects of the lines. In fact, the contrast between the railways of the two countries was very striking. In France, led and guarded by the sovereign power, method was observable and success had apparently attained, while in England confusion was paramount, and the railway interest, ungoverned and undefended, was left to the chances of competition, abandoned to every species of attack and 'black-mail,' and was only conscious of authority in the shape of exactions. This view suggested many grave and difficult considerations, some of which fell rather within the province of the philosopher and statesman than of the civil engineer. The President apologised for having dwelt so much at length upon the financial part of the subject, but he contended that the whole question practically resolved itself into a control of the application of capital to a given purpose; which, far from being foreign to the province of the civil engineer, must, on the contrary, be deemed a most important part of it, and should rather be set down as the first and beginning of his studies to the duties of his professional career. For the problem proposed to practical science was, not merely the execution of certain works, but rather their arrangement and construction in a manner calculated to realise the objects in which they originated. The proposition then, being not simply that railways should be constructed, but that they should be so made as, while conferring a public benefit, they should produce, for their proprietors, the benefits in expectation of which funds for their construction had been contributed—the problem was, what effect of capital applied to a given object, in the hope of profit, was thus a main element of the subject on which the modern engineer had to exert his skill and judgment. The practical science of the present day, as utilised in the service of moneyed enterprise, could not reasonably conclude itself at fault by any glaring defect in its exercise that enterprise did not reap its fair reward. It was obvious that when the employment of science by wealth was mainly actuated by the stimulus of gain, if the inducement ceased the occupation would be at an end. Public works could no longer be attempted where the experience showed that, instead of profit, ruin must ensue. Confidence would give way to distrust, capital would seek its harvest in other channels, and the cause of past disappointment would become the object of prejudice, which years of subsequent profit would not entirely eradicate. In no case, then, the successful financial result of the combination of science and capital was the important feature, and the due appreciation of this view really concerned the engineer no less than the statesman or the capitalist."

The address was received with much applause; and it was resolved that it should be printed and circulated with the minutes of proceedings.

The following article on the same subject is extracted from the Times of the 15th of January:—

That there is a considerable difference between a French and an English railway is what a good many of our readers will have discovered for themselves, and have drawn, perhaps, a certain moral from their conclusions; but there is one particular point of distinction on which ordinary passengers are not very likely to reflect. In France railways are profitable to the proprietors as well as to the public—in England the public comes off better than in France, but the proprietors far worse. Generally speaking, these great undertakings have to our eastern colonies and across the Channel, but unremunerative in these islands; and the question is, under what circumstances such a contrast was established. The whole subject was admirably reviewed on Tuesday last at the Institution of Civil Engineers by Mr. Joseph Locke, President of that body, and we yesterday transferred to our eastern columns a complete report of the address. In some parts the investigation necessarily assumed rather a technical complexion, but its leading deductions can be readily understood.

Railways are more profitable in France than in England, because the interest of the State in the former country was exerted to prevent extravagant and calamitous outlay at the first period of construction. Government decided on the best line, adjudged it to the most promising bidders, assisted the work, in many cases, from national funds, and protected the proprietary interest against competition. The objection of rivalry enabled the managers of the lines to bestow great attention on their own interests, and trains, accordingly, were not very frequent, nor was the rate of speed maintained very great. Every train, as a rule, was pretty well filled, and moderation of pace saved both tear and wear of stock. In England all these conditions were reversed. Government not only did not protect railway enterprise from competition, but it is said even to have encouraged the rivalry of contending projectors. Landowners got enormous prices for land. Parliamentary contests occasioned immense sacrifices of money, the objection of actual lines perpetuated the results of competition, trains were multiplied, fares reduced, and the impatience of Englishmen gratified by express speed. Of course, with such items on the respective sides of the account, there is no great wonder about the nature of the balance as far as shareholders are concerned, nor do it at all surprising that the "railway interest" should conceive itself somewhat aggrieved on this side of the Channel. As a matter of fact, the average dividend upon our railway property is lower than its owners might justly expect, nor is any fair proportion discoverable between the advantages accruing to the public and the remuneration of those at whose cost these advantages were created. We believe, however, that the French system would have been absolutely impracticable in this country, that the system pursued by our own Legislature is by no means answerable for the whole of the evil experienced, and that the position of the shareholding body might be so improved by their own efforts as to bring them very nearly to a level with their brethren in France.

The most take leave to observe that there are two parties to transactions of this kind. The public is entitled to consideration as well as the proprietors, and this consideration in France has evidently been concentrated upon the latter to the prejudice of the former. It is true enough that the French have got their railways, and that such means of communication are vastly above those previously in use; but they have not got all they might have got. "The service to the public," says Mr. Locke, "is still very limited." The aim of the French Government, in fact, was to secure itself and the contributors together, and the accommodation to be provided was measured with lower requirements. The principle has no doubt succeeded, but it has been at the high cost, for the railways in France are fewer, slower, and dearer than they might have been. This state of things may very naturally appear agreeable to the owners of railway property, but it would be less so to advocates of the public interest. In fact, if the French people were as restless and impatient in such matters as ourselves, and adopted the same vent for their emotions, it would be quite possible to get up at a public meeting in that country, and show by a contrast of railway service in France and England how very much Frenchmen had lost by the institution of monopolies instead of the action of competition.

It will be asked, however, which of these two principles is the proper one? No doubt the public gets a better bargain here than in France, but has it any right to such advantage at the expense of private contributors? Can any man reasonably require to be served at a loss to those by whom the service is performed? This question obviously opens an infinite sphere of inquiry, but the results of 10 years' experience appear to us to prove that the proprietors of English railways have really less complaint against the Legislature than against their own Boards of Management, and that of the two systems, that adopted in this country was not only better adapted to our national habits, but better in principle too. We will take at once the strongest and most salient point in illustration of the argument, viz., the sanction of more than one line to a particular terminus. Nothing at the outset could seem more absurd than this, yet nothing, in the present day, can be clearer than that there really is room for more than one railway between two places. What would have been the condition of passengers or traffic in this country if the communication between North and South had been limited to a single "arterial line?" Even as it is, the lines are all so gorged with work that the most fertile source of accidents is sought in the multiplicity of trains rendered necessary, and one great company, notwithstanding all competition, is laying down a third line of rails on account of the positive insufficiency of the original way. Travelling of every description has been increased beyond conception, nor do we believe there is a single instance of any trunk-line, whether with or without a direct rival, on which the traffic has not surpassed the most sanguine estimates of the original project. It would be hard to prove that there are too many railways in England for the public service, nor can it be summarily asserted that there are too many for the interest of the proprietors. No doubt, the average value of the property is too low; but is there nothing to be said on this point beyond appealing to the system of Sir Robert Peel?

We think it plain, from actual facts, that more than one line may run from one terminus to another, and pick up a fair profit as it goes; and the sanction, therefore, of these undertakings in duplicate was perfectly justifiable. Considering the known cost of construction and the known expenses of working—expenses which Mr. Locke tells us are less, notwithstanding our rate of travelling, in England than in France—it cannot be said that the accommodation actually furnished to the public is greater than its merits by the money it has paid; indeed, prices might be reduced, and shareholders still remunerated, were it not for the "dead weight of primary debt," which hangs like a millstone about the necks of the great companies. That this debt was incurred in great measure from the costs incidental to rivalry and contention is perfectly true, but it would be too much to maintain that the public should have been deprived of its prospects in order that the path of prudence might have been made smoother to speculators. We will not so much in the opening given by the Legislature to competition as in the excess to which this competition was carried, and we may add, is carried still. There was really pasture enough for many, but each wanted it all, and the truth of this proposition is to be found in the fact, which no one would contend for, that if all the existing lines in England had been successively sanctioned, without being allowed to expend money upon objecting to each other, there would at this moment be excellent profits for every line among them. The lines are not one bit too numerous, but each cost too much to start with, owing to the jealousies of the rival.

After all, too, it admits of very great doubt whether the disadvantages of the proprietaries in this country, as compared with the advantages of the public, are not, to a most material extent, unreal and removable. It has been more than once maintained by correspondents of great ability in these columns that notwithstanding all the waste irretrievably incurred, railway property is, in truth, more valuable than it appears; that its depression is not warrantable by facts, and that publicity and certainty in accounts would rapidly improve it. Companies, moreover, if they cut each other's throats to start with, need not go on doing so now. If two years' wear and tear of stock in malignant rivalry, till both run at a loss, they can blame no system nor principle but their own. Railways are encumbered with large debts, but so is the nation itself. Like the nation, they are fortunate in their earnings, and are doing an immense amount of trade, nor do we see why they should not thrive also, in despite of their capital account. The public in most localities enjoys very good accommodation, but it also pays pretty good fares, and if shareholders get less than their due—as we do not deny—it is not because travellers get more.

CRICKET.—A match between the University and Garrison Clubs was played on the Garrison ground on Monday last—the former winning in one innings. The Garrison scored 99 in both innings; the University, 191.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

WE have Adelaide journals to the 22nd.

Mr. Bonney, for many years Commissioner of Crown Lands, had been entertained at a public dinner, prior to his departure from the colony, and highly praised by its people, with which he had always settled disputes between squatters as to boundary, and for the judgment with which, years ago, he drew up the squatting regulations, whereby that collision between the pastoral and the agricultural interests that had created enmities in the other colonies had been avoided in South Australia.

THE NORTHERN EXPEDITION.—The following is an extract of a letter received at the Crown Lands Office yesterday, from Mr. Babbage, and dated from Thomas's station, March 7th:—"I started on Saturday, with the tank-cart and provisions for two months, intending to cross the lake; but in crossing a rough creek near this station, the axle of the tank-cart got bent, and I have sent it down to Port Augusta to be strengthened. I start again to-morrow with the light dray and fifty gallons of water in small tanks, as it not to be less than a fortnight. The portion of our stores from Port Augusta to this station has been going on. One of the drays arrived to-day on its second trip; but the other one, with wooden wheels, remnant of Hack's expedition, had to be sent back to Port Augusta in consequence of the tires coming off, owing to the shrinkage of the wooden wheels. It will, however, be repaired in a few days. I had forgot to mention that Mr. Murdock Campbell has been out again to Swinden's country, and passed by here a day or two before I started, proceeding south. Under these circumstances, I have engaged a small settler of the name of Burt as my guide. He is to bring his own horse, to be found in rations, and £5 a month. After the party get to Campbell's Lake, if it is favourable for a depot, I shall send Burt back, with directions to Mr. Harris to bring the remainder of the party and the stores. Mr. Burt's engagement will probably extend over four weeks, as I want him to guide Mr. Harris back, while I remain with Campbell from Lake Campbell. I take Warrior, Jesse (the new recruit), and Nance with me, leaving the rest of the men with Mr. Harris. I have had nothing but illness amongst the men since starting out here. Jesse is getting rather better, but the cook (Lewis) is now ill. The weather has been intensely hot, the thermometer inside the tarpaulin standing at 97 degrees. I hope for a change will come soon. Please ask the commissioner to put Jones down on the staff of the expedition. He is one of the most valuable men I have met, and so thoroughly up to everything connected with horses."

NEW GOLD DISCOVERY.—We are informed that a new lead of gold has been discovered at Balhuga, giving indications of profitable working. The person who discovered the lead has extracted from it a pound weight of gold, which he has sold to one of the banks. The information also has thus reached us—we could not withhold from our readers, although we should have been glad had the circumstances been more fully detailed. But we shall doubtless learn more of the matter in a day or two.

THE COAL DISCOVERY.—We stated a short time since that some samples of coal had been found in digging a well in the neighbourhood of Kapunda. Since then a further and more thorough examination of the information has thus reached us—we could not withhold from our readers, although we should have been glad had the circumstances been more fully detailed. But we shall doubtless learn more of the matter in a day or two.

Extracts from the Melbourne papers:

The Offley, is another of the vessels coming down the schooner Hartlepool, ran ashore on the west beach of the Wash Channel. She remained there 41 hours, but sustained no damage. The Offley was towed off by the Black Eagle tug.

H.M.S. Nigerne left Calcutta and the Sand Heads on the 13th February. She experienced a heavy S.E. gale in the Bay of Bengal, and, since then, light and fine weather. She has sailed at this port for Sydney. She will, however, touch at Port Phillip for Sydney, to convoy H.M. 77th regiment to India.

The following are the names of the officers of H.M.S. Nigerne:—C. T. M. Purvis, commander; Charles Fitzstone, Georgo Stringer, Charles H. Cayley, Henry Bowlby, John O. Jones, Henry J. Reilly, paymaster; Thomas Waterfield, chief engineer; G. B. Cole, assistant; X. A. Cardale, assistant; Thomas Cooper, surgeon; Bruce Plummer, midshipmen; J. W. Grendy, C. W. Jones, W. Hodgson, master's assistant; J. W. Woodyer, C. Ross, W. Hopkins, assistant surgeons.

Commander Purvis, report the Nigerne, left her on shore in Apollo Bay, 18 miles of rather poor. She went ashore at daylight yesterday morning. The schooner was not injured by the same place, and was expected to be got off during the night.

The brigs Highland Lassie and Sea Nymph, which the steamer in the West Channel, were got off on Tuesday morning.

The American ship Toronto was released from quarantine on Friday, and arrived in Hobson's Bay on Saturday morning. The after having Liverpool Immigration was mustered among the crew, and on the night of the 18th December, a fight of Tuesday night they assembled the chief officer, who, in self-defence, fired a pistol shot at one of the ringleaders. On the following day a meeting of the passengers was held, when the following resolutions were passed, in approval of the conduct of the chief officer, and requesting report to Captain Mumford and his officers if required:—"That in this opinion the chief mate acted in self-defence, Mr. Harry, was fully justified in acting as he did under the peculiar circumstances in which he was placed. That the meetings have every confidence in Captain Mumford and the officers in charge of the ship, and cannot but admire the prudence and efficient manner in which each of them performed his duty, and should the time so any future occasion arises any independent meetings we might perceive to report, the captain and officers in maintaining their authority. These resolutions were signed by 81 passengers. Several of the ringleaders were placed in custody on Saturday by order of the Council.

The clipper ship Norfolk will take her departure on Wednesday evening next, carrying gold to the amount of nearly 90,000 ounces.

The ship Tasso, 564 tons, Captain Argyr, was loading at Collcutts, for Melbourne, on 19th February. The ship Portsmouth, 501 tons, sailed from Seager, for Melbourne and Sydney, on 1st February.

The American ship Waverley left New York on the 1st September; when, in about four or five days, she lost her main topmast, and was obliged to put into Rio, with five feet of water in her hold. Shortly after leaving Rio, she encountered a terrible gale of three days duration. On arrival at Port Phillip Heads, on the 21st instant, she was placed in quarantine, and was not allowed on the 28th instant, and arrived in Hobson's Bay yesterday afternoon.

During the passage from Adelaide, Captain A. A. Harper, of the Bayra Bayra, met with a serious accident. He was leaning against an iron rail of the poop, when the rail gave way, and he fell head on the deck heavily below. His head, shoulder, and back are seriously injured. Fortunately Dr. Swan was a passenger, who paid him every attention.

GEELONG.

DEPARTURES.

March 24.—Success, for Launceston.
March 27.—Wanderer, for Sydney; Tasa, for Newcastle.

ADELAIDE.

ARRIVALS.

March 16.—Hanover, from Mauritius; Rebecca, from Port-Lincoln; Adelaide, from Illawarra.
March 18.—Harlequin, from Mauritius.

HOBART TOWN.

March 31.—Cashmere, from Mauritius.

LAUNCESTON.

ARRIVALS.

March 30.—Yarra, Anna Maria, from Newcastle.

Drowning at Wollongong Creek.—Cases have recently occurred in which a portion of the waves of winding rivers have deserted the channel, and have taken a direct course into space. A case of this nature occurred, not long since, the Prince Regent was compelled to return to port, a whaling boat having been lost in a similar way. The loss of lives of 3700 was sustained. In the trial of a woman of this vessel, a report of which will be found in our police column, Mr. Thirlwall, the coroner, was of the opinion, that the prisoner was not guilty, altered by law on every occasion when changed himself from a vessel without the intention of so doing. Mr. Thirlwall is not a man of an extreme nature, but in these instances he will be fully justified in acting up to his determination.—Hobart Town Mercury, March 31.

The Sydney Morning Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1858.

In the Legislative Council yesterday, the President announced that Mr. Justice Dickinson had resigned his seat as a member of the House.

In reply to a question put by Mr. Wise, whether Mr. Rowland, the surgeon-superintendent of the Sir Benjamin had received payment for his services on board that ship, and whether any steps had been taken by the Government to procure his appearance, to answer the charges that had been made against him?

The Solicitor-General stated that the Government had issued instructions to have the charges against Mr. Rowland on charges of assault preferred by two of the female passengers; but on application being made at his lodging-house, it was ascertained that he had ceased to make his appearance there, although his baggage remained. Neither the surgeon, the matron, nor the constables had received any gratuity, nor would they until the Government had sifted to the bottom the charges preferred against those entrusted with the management of the immigrants. The ship's papers had also been seized with the view to the Government ascertaining whether any blame was attributable to the owners or officers of the vessel.

The Solicitor-General obtained leave to bring in a bill for establishing District Courts, and a bill for the better preservation of Registered Instruments, both of which were read a first time.

Mr Alfred Stephen obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Act for the Maintenance of Deserted Wives and Children, and the bill was read a third time.

The Council adjourned till Wednesday next.

The great majority of Christians have devoted this day to the memory of events connected with the most awful and sacred of the doctrines of the Christian religion. They will dwell upon them with solemnity, deepened by the consciousness that countless thousands are contemplating the same scenes, and are inspired with similar emotions. The Calvary of Christ comprehends every thing sublime in nature, touching in incidents, and transcendent in result. Even those who see nothing in the death of Jesus but the surrendering of the innocent to mortal agony—the unjust condemnation of a teacher, from whose lips descended nothing but the lessons of wisdom, in the account of love, will respectfully withdraw from interrupting the deeper and more solemn views of those who see in Christ crucified the refuge of the world.

It is not the province of a newspaper to touch, except with a trembling and gentle hand, on the events commemorated to-day. It is in this cautious and respectful tone we desire ever to treat topics which embrace the highest interests and hopes of masses of our fellow-countrymen.

We cheerfully trace to the lessons the Christian world has drawn from Calvary innumerable blessed fruits. It has taught us that the greatest sorrow is often associated with the highest worth—that heaven seems sometimes to abandon the innocent for the sake of the guilty, and that from the most tragical of all catastrophes may proceed perennial streams of blessedness and joy.

This event instructs us how prejudice and self-interest may obscure the eyes and stimulate the evil passions of the soul. The Being set forth among all nations as the perfection of virtue, humanity, and wisdom was adjudged unworthy to live.

That Name, execrated by the multitude, and surrendered by the ruler and priest, has been made the theme of a hundred generations, and will this day be the subject of ten thousand sacred songs. It is thus we are taught to rise above temporary passions, and compute for the power which could cover the head once lowered beneath a load of unmerited infamy, with immortal renown.

Every person must be impressed with the ready assent of all classes of our fellow-citizens, to withdraw from business on Friday, in honour of the devotion of those to whom this day is sacred. We hope that none will ever attempt to compel a religious observance; and that on the other hand those who dissent from the prevailing views on this solemn Christian celebration, will score to offend the religious feelings of their fellow-citizens. The era of persecution is passed, and having freedom of choice we shall see that our common happiness demands that, living in times less exacting of deference than formerly, we should be more ready to forbear and to forgive, and to the religious sympathies of all classes of our countrymen.

It will be seen from a communication in another column, that Mr. Wentzer complains of the style in which the conduct of the Royal Mail Company, with reference to the Panama route, was characterised by Captain Towns at the late meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. He declares that there has been no "duplicity" or "humbugging" on the part of his directors, and asserts that his former mission to this colony was in good faith.

Captain Towns may have expressed himself rather too strongly, but, at the same time there can be little doubt that he gave a fair expression to what is a very common feeling in the colony, and that he only said publicly what scores of mercantile men have said privately. If in this respect the motives of the directors have been exposed to misconstruction, they have mainly themselves to blame for it. A little more courtesy, and a more frank and ample statement of their position, would have disarmed this kind of censure. Considering the formal manner in which the directors accredited Mr. Wentzer to the Colonial Government, for the purpose of negotiating a conditional contract, and the cordial assent that was given to his proposals, it would not have been amiss if they had communicated some satisfactory explanation of the sudden change in their policy. Mr. Wentzer, it is true, returned to the colony, but he came back in a somewhat different capacity. He left us as the successful contractor for the Panama route. He re-appeared to supersede the manager of the Suez route, and the official communication he forwarded to the colonial secretary of the change, was by no means so full and satisfactory as ought to have been furnished by the directors. The British Government, we were told, did not approve of the agreement, and for that reason the directors had not laid it before the shareholders. Mr. Wentzer was the bearer of the truth, not so far as it went was it satisfactory statement. The consent of the Home Government was never asked, and never considered necessary. If the Colonial Governments had negotiated a contract for the service with a colonial company, we should have been very much surprised to hear that her Majesty's Ministers had put a veto on the agreement. And why should such interference be considered proper simply because the company was an English one? If the directors had fairly evoked the alteration in their position—an alteration obvious to every one—their conduct would have been open to suspicion. It is open for them to do so still, and to negotiate with the colonies for an efficient service on fair terms.

We have no reason to believe that the directors were guilty of bad faith in originally sending out Mr. Wentzer, and that time they wished him to be successful, and it was to their interest that he should be; but, as Mr Wentzer candidly admits, the amalgamation with the European and Australian Mail Company had modified their views of the Australian service. We are glad, however, to have his assurance that his directors, looking forward to their permanent, as well as their immediate interests, are by no means disposed to disparage or neglect the Panama route. But if they mean really to do anything they must be quick about it, or the colonists will be committing themselves to negotiations in other quarters. Mr. Wentzer says they must wait in patience till the Suez route is satisfactorily organised. But how long will that be? And when that time arrives, how much longer will it be before the first vessel quits Sydney for the American isthmus? It will take at least two months after the agreement is signed, before the proper boats can be built, and put upon their station, and the present contract has little more than three years and a half to run. So that if the Company really intend to retrieve their promise prior to the expiration of their contract, they must bestir themselves very much time to spare, especially considering the months that must necessarily be absorbed in negotiations. If the directors are not too busy to attend to the matter, and are prepared either to repeat their former offer or to make a fresh one on an entirely new footing, the colonists will doubtless be ready to condone the past, and meet their proposals in a liberal spirit.

INSOLVENT COURT.

Tuesday, March 31.

Before the Chief Commissioner of Insolvent Estates.

In the estate of Richard Maxwell, a first meeting. The debt, according to 5068 12s. 2d. was proved. It was stated to the Court that the insolvent had absconded from the colony, and that the whole of his discovered assets had been sold, by which the sum of £245 17s. 6d. had been realised.

In the estate of Thomas Jackson, a second meeting. Insolvent's amended schedule, with the accounting to £1818 14s. 3d. were proved. Insolvent made application for an extension of the maintenance order until the day of the adjourned meeting, which was refused.

In the estate of Rudolph Schulstein, a first meeting. Nothing done. A special meeting was set down in this estate for examination of insolvent, but it appeared that he was in Darlinghurst gaol awaiting trial on charge of felony. Under these circumstances, the examination meeting was adjourned until the trial is over.

In the estate of Samuel Crook, a first meeting. Four debts were proved.

In the estate of Frederick L. Herrmann, a single meeting. Two debts were proved, and insolvent was allowed his household furniture and wearing apparel.

In the estate of Parry Long, a first meeting. Two debts were proved.

In the estate of John Riley, a first meeting. Nothing done.

IN AN I. ORDER.

Insolvent's wife applied to the Court for an allowance. She informed His Honor that her husband was seriously ill and utterly incapacitated from earning a livelihood. After hearing the assignee on the part of the Bank, made an order for the payment of £2 2s. weekly, for three weeks from this date.

SUMMONSES.

John Jenkins, of Victoria-street, Woollomoolloo, Sydney, miller. Liabilities, £1376 12s. 1d. Assets: value of personal property, £24 1s. Outstanding debts, £10 11s. Total, £34 12s. Deficit, £1342 0s. 1d. Mr. Morris, official assignee.

Rumm.—My sequestration is attributed to the insolvency of my partner, Mr. Rumm, from whom I owed to me to the extent of £437 14s. 10d. I have sustained other serious losses in my business, but until their failure was decisively in perseverance and endeavour to overcome them; but the above loss at the present renders it quite impossible to do so.—John Jenkins.—Adv.

CENTRAL POLICE COURT.

Edwin William Hollinworth, on bail, appeared to answer a charge preferred by John Wells, Accountant of the Colonial Treasury, of having, as it was alleged, feloniously embezzled on the 26th November, 1854, the sum of £171 10s. on the 23rd December, 1854, the sum of £8 17s. 6d. —and on the 29th December, 1854, the sum of £25 1s. 6d.—which sums came into his possession by reason of his employment in the Treasury, and were the property of Her Majesty the Queen.

The Solicitor-General and the Criminal Crown Solicitor were present to conduct the prosecution. Mr. W. Roberts and Mr. Forbes (of Redd and Dawson) attended on behalf of the prisoner.

The Solicitor-General rose, and said that before calling witnesses to prove the charge, he would place of the facts of the case, which would enable them more clearly to apprehend as the evidence proceeded, its bearing upon the charge against the prisoner.

Mr. Dawson called the attention of the Bench to the rule of the Court of Ministerial Inquiries, counsel were precluded from making a speech.

The Solicitor-General said that whatever rule the Court may have laid down for their own guidance, and for the guidance of Counsel, in ordinary cases, in such cases, it cannot be applied to the law officers of the Crown, and he would insist upon his right to be heard.

Mr Forbes quoted the 9th Victoria Act (11 and 12 Victoria, c. 42, section 17), in support of the course pursued by the Justices. It is clear that all they had to do was to receive all the evidence that may be adduced in support of any charge brought under their notice, and, if in their judgment a prima facie case of guilt made, to commit the prisoner for trial, forwarding to the Attorney-General the depositions, as their voucher for what they had done, and the grounds upon which they had so acted. Even the statement of the accused, in reply to the charge, if he thought proper to make one, was required to be taken down in writing, and if needful made evidence against him. Counsel, on the other hand, if allowed to address the Bench, said just what they pleased, and, if the magistrates were in any degree swayed by their decisions by the speech on one side or the other, it would be impossible for the magistrates to transmit to the Attorney-General all the grounds upon which they had arrived at their decision. It would moreover place in an unjust position the prisoner, who had not the means of securing legal assistance in his defence. So that, both legally and morally, he thought that the rule was one that ought to prevail, and to be of universal application. He did not say but that cases would occasionally come before magistrates where they would wish to hear counsel on some particular point, when they would doubtless ask for such assistance. Twice in Victoria the legality of this rule had been questioned, and he had hoped that steps would have been taken for the determination of the question by the highest tribunal, and he thought it now high time that it should be either abandoned or made a final order.

The Solicitor-General said the question referred to being directory merely, and not prohibitory, the Court was not bound to pursue that course, as they would be if the terms were of the latter character. But the words were prohibitory, the law officer of the Crown would not be affected thereby unless specifically mentioned. The extreme public importance of the case was indicated by the presence of a Crown law officer to prosecute it, and he claimed to be afforded an opportunity of explaining to the Bench the evidence, bearing of which he was perfectly intended to submit in support of the charge against the prisoner, a great deal of which he thought would be otherwise inexplicable. He trusted, therefore, that the Bench would not decide against hearing him.

Mr. Roberts said that this case ought to be conducted in the same way as all other criminal prosecutions, for indictable offences, in all of which the Queen is the prosecutor. The justices have no discretion whatever in the matter, but to act in the mode prescribed by the Act, as laid down by the Parliament of the legislature in England, or the colonial legislature, when adopting the English Act, had intended to prevent any imagination, which, perhaps, they might have expressly stated that intention, as is invariably done in Acts of Parliament, the provisions of which seem to trench upon rights or privileges which it is their intention to preserve. Magistrates are bound to act according to evidence, and not upon speeches of counsel, and if the learned Solicitor-General had a case in hand which cannot be made plain by the evidence, it is clearly one which ought not to have been initiated, and the prisoner should be discharged.

Their Worships were unanimously of opinion that they were precluded from hearing the learned Solicitor-General, and expressed their wish that the question should be settled by the superior Court.

The Solicitor-General said that he submitted to the ruling of the Bench, but he desired that a note be made of his protest against it. He called John Wells: The prisoner before the court is the person referred to in the information just read.

William Newcombe, clerk in the Treasury—lately in the revenue branch, but now and since 1st January, 1854, in the pay branch: I know the prisoner, who, in the month of April, was a second-class clerk in the revenue branch, and on the death of Mr. Dugald Macpherson was promoted to the chief clerkship of that branch about the 14th April of that year: it was duty was to receive all the cash forwarded by post, pass it to account, to sign receipts for that money, and to keep it for a time, varying according to circumstances, and finally to hand it over to the clerk in charge of the receiving room; that clerk, after Mr. Macpherson's death, was Mr. M'Donald, then Mr. Smith, and next Mr. Leonard; in November, 1854, M'Donald was temporarily absent on leave, during which time I had charge of that department, and assisted as receiving clerk until his return, early in December: we have a book in the revenue branch called "The cash per post book," and which is supposed to contain an account of all moneys received by post: this is the book kept in November, 1854; there are entries in my hand-writing: on an entry on 26th November, 1854, received by Masters, C. C. L., Gold licenses, £171 10s.; own handwriting, as follows:—Hay's cheque, £1; Masters' ditto, £5; Gibbon's ditto, £5; Gibbon's ditto, £5; ditto, £9; Fox's ditto, £4; Gibbon's ditto, £18; Durbie's ditto, £8 8s.; cash, £113 5s.; total, £171 10s." On the whole of the entry in my handwriting, this was made by direction of Mr. Hollinworth, and I was in habit of making such entries in the course of business by his direction; I was then acting as substitute for Mr. M'Donald in the receiving room; I do not recollect receiving from prisoner that particular sum of £171 10s.; it was the practice for the money to be sent received and carried to the Treasury account, and those carried in the "Suspense" account: when moneys were paid in it was customary to hand in with it the amount of the receipts, which were entered in the public account, and that to the suspense account; and on the following day to prepare a voucher showing the sums so paid on, which I, when Mr. Hollinworth's deputy, sign it; on the opposite page of this entry is an entry in his handwriting under the head of suspense account showing that, on the 27th November, the sum of £171 10s. was paid to that account; the entries on this slip, marked A, are in Hollinworth's handwriting: the receipts were received to the two accounts do not find a sum of £171 carried to the suspense fund; there is an entry to that effect, but a line is drawn through it; there is an item of £8 17s. carried to the suspense fund; I am this voucher (marked B) headed "Suspense Account," which shows the sums paid to the suspense account on the 23rd November, 1854, £607 10s.; it was made by me from the slip marked A, as was my duty as my memorandum, is signed by Mr. Hollinworth; this paper (marked C) is a receipt of 28th November, 1854, No. 169, received from Gold Commissioner Stephen, £25 1s. for gold licenses, and signed by Mr. Hollinworth; this (marked D) is duplicate receipt, dated 13th January, 1855, of £3, from Mr. King, on account of licenses to dig for gold in September, 1853; in the cash per post book see an entry in Hollinworth's writing of £159 10s. drawn out of the suspense account on 28th November, 1854, which sum is not credited to the revenue account; there is on that day credited to the revenue account; on the 13th January is a similar entry for £3; the two sums making £171 10s.; in the course of business these accounts for the 27th would be made up on the 28th November, and for the 13th on the 29th, unless either day fell on a Sunday.

By Mr. Roberts: The receipts C and D show that the sums stated were properly carried to the public account, having regard to the way in which they were put into books were kept, from March, 1854, until June, 1855, it would take some time—some weeks probably—to make out how much money should be in the Treasury; I would have of course to go through every item; I do know that the suspense fund and the cash fund were kept upon by Mr. Hollinworth, from March, 1854, until June, 1855, as one fund; it was his duty to pay moneys received into the bank as soon as possible; it was open to the Colonial Treasurer daily, or as often as he thought proper, to call upon the chief clerk for a statement of the balance in hand; I recollect a sum of £7016 11s. 7d. being carried to the suspense fund. I believe by Mr. Hollinworth; I do not know that there was any confusion in the accounts when Mr. Hollinworth took office; I know of an attempt made to ascertain at what that sum consisted of, and it failed; when moneys were received, without the necessary documents, and when any delay was likely to arise, they were placed to the "Suspense Fund;" it could be properly passed to the account to which they belonged—or in cases where remittances were made without the proper documents, it necessarily was dishonoured, when delay of necessity arose before the sum represented by it or them could be carried to account. The Bench: Delay of what? Witness: Remittances made by me at Mr. Hollinworth's dictation from a letter; it was no part of my duty to handle the money or cheques named; I cannot tell by this book, but by another book, whether the cheques named were paid; the receipts C and D are in the handwriting of Mr. Mackenzie and signed by Mr. Hollinworth; the duplicates were made by me; I do not know if I prepared the original receipts; it was possible for a duplicate to differ from an original receipt, and have been; I have seen the duplicates, and on comparing them with the originals; these are initialed by me, and I have no doubt I compared them with the originals; the receipt of the 27th November, on Monday, November, "I see an entry in Hollinworth's writing, "voucher required for £8," which may account for the £8 drawn through the line £171 10s.

Re-examined: The receipts show that the moneys named were paid into the Treasury; I consider them as proofs that the moneys were paid by Hollinworth to the payment of the sums of £159 10s. and £3 were received as gold licenses, and are drawn out of the suspense fund and carried to the public fund as the money was paid into the Treasury, and paid into the bank, and were only known as the suspense and the public accounts in the Treasury books.

Bench: This book shows that the money, £171 10s., was in the bank when Mr. Hollinworth transferred it from the suspense to the public account; in the books; I see that it was paid into the bank; I can show that it was not paid in on the 27th November; I know Mr. Hollinworth to sign receipts for moneys before they were filled up with the amounts.

By Mr. Wells: I am accountant to the Treasury, and have been since 1850; I know prisoner, and I have been engaged in examining his suspense account from March, 1854, until June 1855; the investigation occupied me a little over six weeks, and I find there has been upwards of £1600 4s. 8d. more than has been paid into it; I have before me an entry of November 26th, £171 10s., received from Mr. Masters, and on opposite side an entry states that it was on the 27th November paid into the suspense account; from my examination of the books I can positively say that no such sum was on that day or any subsequent day paid into the suspense fund; Mr. Hollinworth had the custody of this cash per post book; on slip A I see an entry of £607 10s., which does not include either £168 10s., or £3, or £171 10s., but is a separate payment by a single individual; Hollinworth has been in my presence, and by me asked to explain this item of £171 10s.; he said that he could not account for the sum having been drawn out of the suspense account, into which it had not been paid; on a slip shown me that on the 27th November the sum of £8623 14s. 8d. was credited to the revenue, less £30 paid to Mr. Greenhill, drawn on suspense, leaving £8593 14s. 8d., of which £8416 9s. 4d. was paid into the bank, of which £8416 9s. 4d. was in cheques, and £960 in cash; the receiving room cash or day book should show the several cheques received on 26th November, but does not name any such as those enumerated in the cash per post book, as received on the 26th, or any day afterward. (The cheques enumerated the several items of which the sum of £8623 14s. 8d. was made up.) I never heard of such a practice in the Treasury, as giving receipts to individuals before the moneys were paid received.

Cross-examined: I had no knowledge of the manner in which the books were kept until I made the examination; I had no knowledge that moneys placed in suspense being appropriated to other purposes; the books do not appear to have been kept any where by any clerk; I did not consider the balances on the transfer of office from Mr. Meriwether to Mr. Riddell; nor on the transfer from Mr. Riddell to Mr. Hall, nor any subsequent transfer of office; the books examined on each transfer, for the satisfaction of the incoming Treasurer that the balances shown in the accountants (my) office were available; then the accountant would not appear on those occasions; Mr. Hollinworth never gave me the balances of his accounts; I am not aware that it was a part of the duty of the Treasury that he did not have balanced; Mr. Hollinworth has paid money out of the Suspense Fund on his predecessor's account, and, I believe, that there were large payments from no part of the £1859 4s. 8d. now found to be deficient; whenever I spoke to him of the deficiency, he said he had examined their with the accounts and fully examined he would not be found a defaulter; when I told him that his books had been kept in a slovenly manner, he said that he did not agree with the system, and that he was not to blame for it; the accounts were examined after me by the chief clerk of the Audit Office, and he certified to the correctness of the accounts; the sum of £7016 11s. was placed to the credit of the Suspense account from March, 1854, to June, 1856, amount to upwards of £600,000; the amount of the receipts had gone, amount to upwards of £1,600,000.

The hearing of the case was at this stage adjourned until

Tuesday.

Before the same Justices.

William Newcombe re-called: On 26th November, 1854, I was acting in the receiving room in place of Mr. M'Donald; there is a book called the cash-book of the revenue branch; the (prodorsed) is of 26th November; a series of cash received, some in my handwriting and others in Mr. Mackenzie's; those in my hand were made from the receipts as they were handed, signed by Mr. Hollinworth, the chief clerk; the entries of receipts on that day amount to £3532 14s. 8d., including the moneys paid by Mr. Hollinworth, and those handed to me over the counter, and including also the suspense account.

Cross-examined: I do not mean that the sum £3532 14s. 8d. represents the moneys received by Mr. Hollinworth on the 27th November, but those only which are carried to account; I have known a long time that moneys received were not entered in the receipt of moneys by Mr. Hollinworth, and entered in the cash per post book, before they were or could be carried to any account; I have known instances where sums were entered on the slips as intended to be carried to account from the suspense fund, but which for various reasons it was otherwise found would not be carried; for instance, where the amount was made up of cheques, one or more of which was not paid on presentation at the bank; slips were handed me by Mr. Hollinworth took down in pencil but were not so particular as those made use of by Mr. Hollinworth; I do not know of any orders issued to me by Mr. Hollinworth to pay out of the cash pay over moneys either to the suspense account or the general revenue at any given periods; he appeared at all time to have paid over moneys at different dates, as he thought proper.

By Mr. Lucas: It was Mr. Hollinworth's duty, in my opinion, to place moneys to the general account as soon as possible after their receipt; immediately after the receipt of the vouchers from the country.

By Mr. Roberts: That was the practice of the office; I do not know anything about Mr. Hollinworth's powers, nor am I aware of any express directions he may have had on the subject of receipts.

By Mr. Lucas: No doubt the sums of £168 10s. and £3 were placed to account on the date of the receipt, or on other the same or the next day paid into the bank; it must have been paid into the receiving-room on the day the receipt was given.

Cross-examination continued: I do not know when the suspense account was opened by Mr. Hollinworth or at his suggestion; he was acting chief clerk in the office when the account was opened; a new system was then commenced; on the 15th June, 1856, on which date a separate bank account was opened for the suspense account, distinct from the general revenue account; the new system was adopted, I believe, in order to show more readily at a glance how the two accounts stood; I have known Mr. Hollinworth to keep large sums, viz., £200 or £300, in the chest uncredited—passed to neither the general nor the suspense account; I do not know whether it was generally known in the office, but every one else had the same facility as I for ascertaining the fact; there was no attempt made to keep the money back from Mr. Macpherson, in consequence of which Mr. Hollinworth had to pay several sums out of the suspense account which should have been paid on instances arising out of mistakes in Mr. Macpherson's time.

By Mr. Lucas: I have known cheques to have been received, which were dishonoured; in such case whoever took it as cash would be the sufferer, at least for a time; it would be impossible for Mr. Hollinworth to pay the money for which a receipt had been given from the Revenue Office; I have known him to take a cheque as cash, which was afterwards dishonoured, and had to be made good by him.

Cross-examination continued: I only known as much as £200 (or about) to be in the iron chest, in Mr. Hollinworth's custody, uncredited; although a slip I believe by Mr. Hollinworth; I do not know that there was any confusion in the accounts when Mr. Hollinworth took office; I know of an attempt made to ascertain at what that sum consisted of, and it failed; when moneys were received, without the necessary documents, and when any delay was likely to arise, they were placed to the "Suspense Fund;" it could be properly passed to the account to which they belonged—or in cases where remittances were made count, as stated in exhibit F, the amount paid to credit of the iron chest is £874 12s. 9d.; in the account current, the money paid on account of claims on the iron chest, is stated at £537 9s. 6d., being £426 from Mr. Macpherson, and £417 9s. 6d., cash received by post; there is a balance unaccounted for of £53 4s. 3d. in Mr. Hollinworth's favour if the exhibit F be right. This account was made out some months after the account current, which was rendered by me to Mr. Bayes.

By Mr. Lucas: The book in which the suspense account was made up from bottle of receipts, and the entry of the item £7015 11s. 7d. might have been made a month or more after the date; I find from the book produced, this amount was paid into the receiving bench of the Treasury through my hands; the items amounting to £877 12s. 9d. were, I believe, Mr. Hollinworth, were paid before the sum of £7015 11s. 7d. was paid into the Treasury; it was paid in the first instance into a drawer in my desk; Mr. Hollinworth paid it to me to the credit of the suspense account, and when I had made up the day's revenue, inclusive of this sum, I took up to the Treasury (Greenhill); all the entries on the debit side of the suspense account are for sundries; there ought to be books in the treasury to show what the sundry sundries were; I know there were such books; the items in credit side are the total amounts for each day; the items on the debit side of the account, except in very few instances, do not correspond with the entries on the credit side, which were made up of sundries; there is an entry of £174, dated November 25th; that entry was made after the entry of £7015 11s. 7d.; it formed no portion of the latter sum.

William Bayes: Am the senior partner in the firm of Bayes and Learmouth; was brother-in-law to the late Dugald Macpherson; was one of his sureties, and my wife is his executrix; I act for her; I remember the opening of the iron chest on the 21st April, 1854, and was present; an inventory of the contents was made by Mr. Macdonald, who took down the items in the presence of Mr. Hollinworth; the inventory taken down was not summed up; two copies of the inventory were to be made out, one for Mr. Hollinworth and one for me; after many applications, on account of Mrs. Macpherson, I got the inventory, but the account produced; I believed it to be incorrect, and on application to Mr. Mercewther I was informed the original inventory was destroyed; I remember a sum of £420 having been changed to Mr. Macpherson as paid by him to the credit of the Treasury; it was afterwards replaced to my order by order of Mr. Mercewther; in the account rendered to me there was another item inserted by Mr. Hollinworth of £417 9s. 6d.; I do not know of what separate items the sum of £417 9s. 6d. was made up; I have supplied for the information, but have never been able to get a detailed account; I have applied personally to the head of the department and by letter; I believe I applied by letter to Mr. Hollinworth, and received a reply from him; I made the application at about the time I received the amount produced, marked G, which is dated 27th October, 1854.

Cross-examined by Mr. Roberts: I was present at the opening of the iron chest; an inventory was made out in my presence, a copy of which was promised to me; an account was furnished to Mr. Macpherson, showing £1669 11s. 6d. to the credit of the chest; I had no copy of the original inventory, but promised to me was not a correct one, one important item was omitted; before the board of evidence I admitted that a sum of £450 had been taken from the chest by Mr. Macpherson; this sum was represented in the iron chest by a cheque given by me to Mr. Macpherson, signed by Bayes and Learmouth; it was in the cash-box in the iron chest when I was opened; I gave a cheque to Mr. Macpherson on his private account; it was given to Mr. Hollinworth on the night the chest was opened; I knew the cheque was in the iron chest all the time; I never claimed the cash-box in the iron chest; I had no claim upon it; I did write a letter on the part of the executrix of Mr. Macpherson to Mr. Hollinworth about ten days after the iron chest was opened, making a claim on her behalf for £100; I never abandoned the claim; I did not urge it further; it was about October, 1854, that I disputed the account of £1639 11s. 6d.; I disputed the account shortly after I received the account; I did not then dispute the correctness of the inventory of the contents of the iron chest, amounting to £1639 11s. 6d., because I had not then heard that the original inventory was destroyed; the copy of the inventory of the contents of the chest, which I now produce, and which I dispute, I received three or four days after the chest was opened; I did not dispute it then, not knowing the original inventory had been destroyed; I disputed it when application was made to me for money on account of the iron chest; the circumstances under which I gave Mr. Macpherson the cheque for £450 was as follows: Mr. Macpherson, on my asking that an inventory of the iron chest be made, the heads of departments, it was likely there would be a call for the contents of the Treasury, and of moneys sent to him by his friends in the country to be paid into the Government as they fell due, he had used about £450, and he asked me for the cheque of my firm to represent that amount; at the same time Mr. Macpherson said the cheque would not be wanted, but would be repaid out of a loan he was then negotiating; I desired the correctness of the inventory as furnished to me before the Board and before the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly: there was a sealed parcel of bank notes in the chest not mentioned in the copy of the inventory sent to me; I never knew the parcel of notes is not included in the sum of £546 of notes in the inventory, which were loose notes; the parcel was sealed, and was put down in the original inventory as notes found in Mr. Mercewther's desk when Mr. Macpherson succeeded him in office. Mr. Hollinworth said it did not belong to the Government; the number of loose notes, of different amounts, found in the chest, were all put down; there were two or three one hundred pound notes; I will not swear to any of the items in the copy of the inventory, because it is not the document I signed; there is no mention of the sealed packet of notes in it; I will not swear that the sum of £546 is not in it, because I know it does not include the notes in the sealed packet; I believe it does not.

The Court adjourned at half-past four until Saturday.

SATURDAY.

John M'Donald recalled: I was present at the opening of the iron chest, and made an inventory of the contents; it was left with me to make two copies; Mr. Hollinworth, on the following morning, asked me for it, and I gave it him; about an hour afterwards Mr. Hollinworth came to me with another document, which he said was an abstract of the original; I asked him where was the original, and he said that he had torn it up; I asked him if this had been compared with the original, because it was not entitled as if it had been compared.

Cross-examined: I was examined before a board on the subject, and before the Select Committee; Mr. Hollinworth told me that it (meaning the original document) was torn up; I did not say that Hollinworth said that he had torn it up; I believe that the original inventory contained—among its entries one in reference to a sealed packet, but I am not certain; my memory is deficient in that respect; I do not know that the packet contained the sum of £98 1s. 6d., nor do I remember hearing what it contained; I will undertake to swear that I did not receive the abstract on the day that the original was made, but that I received it on either the next or second morning afterwards; I cannot point out any deficiency between the original and the abstract; the original paper was headed "an inventory," while the paper he gave me in lieu was not headed at all; it was like an abstract, and no mention made of the original; I have no recollection of having examined it, but I think I did; I will not swear that I did; I did not point out to Hollinworth any discrepancy in either figures or otherwise; I do not remember if I did so; I asked about the original only because I thought he was about to compare the two with me; I cannot say whether the original document he said he compended with the abstract handed me by him; it is my belief that everything found in the chest was entered in the inventory; the abstract was not added up, because it was then late in the evening, and I was not asked to add it up; Mr. Hollinworth was examined by the Board as to the alleged defalcations of Mr. Macpherson; it was quite a voluntary act of mine that the figures were not added up, but if Hollinworth or Mr. Bayes had told me to do so it would have been done; Hollinworth told me that one of the two present should have a copy of the inventory; I did not receive the paper from him as my copy of the document; Mr. Hollinworth told me that the sealed parcel contained bank notes, and was not the property of the Government, but of Mr. Mercewther.

By Mr. Lucas: Hollinworth said nothing to prevent me from then and there adding up the figures, or making copies of the inventory, but business was mutually dropped for the evening; I do not remember whether he told me to make copies, or that he would have copies made in the morning; it was put into my desk, but not locked up; the chest was opened, and the inventory made on the 21st April.

William Bayes recalled, and document K put into his hands: It purports to be an inventory of the contents of the iron chest on 21st April, 1854; the first entry is "Bank notes, £568;" one item is omitted—a sealed parcel, with an endorsement, "Notes found in Mr. Mercewther's desk when Mr. Macpherson succeeded him;" I am almost sure that "Bank notes" was the term; Mr. Hollinworth explained to me how it came to be there, in accordance with the endorsement; I cannot remember the exact words, but he told me that the key of Mercewther's desk was lost on Macpherson succeeding him, that the desk was broken open by Macpherson and two clerks, and that the parcel was composed of the contents of the desk; he did not therefore, I conclude, but referred to the endorsement; I am not sure that the parcel was not endorsed "Bank notes, et cetera;" I am sure the account which have been paid into the Bank before the account was commenced.

By Mr. Roberts: The sum of £22 4s. 11d. was received in two sums, and credited to the revenue in twelve months; one of which, the first, was commenced, £210 1s.;" £2 12s. drawn from suspense, and £1616 4s. 11d. credited to the revenue, but not drawn from suspense; I know of no other sum of £22 4s. 11d. received in money and the revenue account; in making up the accounts I have not discovered a sum of £110 to the credit of suspense which I cannot account for; I have not discovered a sum of £330 in suspense which does not appear in the cash per post book; I do not know of what it consisted; I cannot they know. Mr. Macpherson may have taken a portion of £7015 11s. 7d. was made up; from the 13th to 27th March he had in his hands that amount and £875, and considerably more; he could have had upwards of £1000 in his hands that period; I am aware that Hollinworth has transferred from suspense to the revenue amounts exceeding by £7 the sum of £7015; the sum of £416 16s. 7d. and two others of £1 each are yet in suspense, which ought to have been drawn out.

By Mr. Lucas: I do not think it possible that by a similar mistake the sum of £168, could have been drawn out of suspense.

Examination resumed: I was accountant in 1854, 1855, and 1856, and the transfers from suspense made by me from documents sent to me by Hollinworth, in some cases without detail, a course against which I protested.

By Mr. Forbes: The sum of £171 10s. never went to suspense, but it has been drawn out in two items of £163 10s. and £2; the sum of £1650 11s. 6d., found in the chest, was composed partly of Macpherson's cheque for £500, of which £420 was returned to Bayes when the cheque was opened; the Treasury paid £1000 to Macpherson, and Macpherson's cheque on account of deficiencies in the iron chest; there was a clear starting point for Macpherson's accounts; Hollinworth's suspense fund, quite independent of Macpherson's accounts; I can undertake to swear that neither of the amounts, £163 10s. or £2, has been by mistake paid into any other account, or has found its way to the Bank.

By Mr. Roberts: I have known Hollinworth to draw from the suspense account the correspondence with the payments into suspense; have no recollection of amounts paid into suspense coming out in other shapes and in other accounts; Hollinworth is most competent to speak on that point; I will swear that large sums have not gone into suspense, and afterward satisfied by cash, without there have been out of suspense; it does appear that considerable sums have been taken out of suspense which had never been paid into it; by way of exhausting the £7015, £5 6s. 7d. in suspense; in cases of return of moneys the advance would be made from sums in hand, and a transfer would be made from suspense to revenue.

The Solicitor-General intimated that the case for the Crown, so far as regarded the sum of £171 10s. was concluded; he would ask the Board if they thought there was sufficient evidence before them on which to send the prisoner for trial; as he did not wish to occupy time in reference to the other two sums in the indictment.

Mr. Roberts submitted that their Worships would not express an opinion until the whole charge, including three seveally, was concluded.

The Solicitor-General said his only object was to save time, but he was quite willing to withdraw the question if unpalatable either to the Bench or the defendant.

Their Worships said that they were not prepared at this stage to express an opinion; the case would be more complete when the whole was heard, he would not say that it was an illegal course; though if Mr. Roberts objected to it, it ought not to be insisted upon.

Mr. Roberts said that it would operate most injuriously to his client, if the charge of £171 10s. were omitted. Supposing it possible, for the sake of argument, that a committee should take place on three charges, how would they be in the evidence to be adduced in support of one of the three.

Their Worships thereupon adjourned the case, for evidence in support of the other alleged acts of embezzlement, until Tuesday.

TUESDAY.

John Wells: I have before me the cash per post book; under date 20th December, 1854, I find an entry of the receipt by the clerk of Petty Sessions at Dubbo, of £42 12s. 6d. in the handwriting of Hollinworth, and an entry in Hollinworth's handwriting; on the other (the right hand) side, to the effect that on the same day the money was paid into suspense; and another entry, also in Hollinworth's hand, that on the 2nd January, 1855, it was drawn out of suspense; here is a receipt dated 2nd January, 1855—not in Hollinworth's handwriting, telegraphed by him, for £12 3s. 3d., and the balance, £1 4s. 3d. is stated to be in the cash per post book; I produce the cash per post book; the clerk of Petty Sessions at Dubbo; I produce the cash per post book; I find the sum of £42 12s. 6d. paid into suspense; there is no such sum was on that day paid into suspense; it is in Hollinworth's handwriting; I find on the 2nd January, 1855, the sum of £42 12s. 6d. at the cash per post slips from 22nd to 29th December inclusive, on the credit side; I find the sum of £42 12s. 6d. to be in the cash book paid into suspense; they are all in Hollinworth's handwriting; I find the sum of £42 12s. 6d. paid into suspense, on the 20th December, 1854, I find an entry of £12 1s. 6d. received from the clerk of Petty Sessions at Dubbo, on the 20th November last, in reference to the contents of an iron chest.

Mr. Roberts submitted that having regard to the rule of law in respect to subsequent admissions in criminal matters, where nothing said by a prisoner is receivable in evidence, unless he have been warned that anything said by him will be given in evidence against him; in that case it was a mere question of account, (and, not contemplating the possibility of a criminal charge against himself, he contented himself with making a statement when no charge was made against him;) without going into such an explanation as under different circumstances he might feel it to be necessary, but which he is now precluded from giving. Besides, it is irrelevant to the present charge. The Solicitor-General replied that it was the first time he had heard that whatever a prisoner said was not admissible in a charge against him. The Bench were unanimously of opinion that whatever may have been said by Hollinworth before a committee of the Legislative Assembly when no charge was made against him, and where he was not cautioned that any statement made by him would be used against him, was inadmissible. The witness thereupon withdrew.

John Wells recalled: In arriving at the deficiency of £1627 4s. 8d. against Hollinworth, in the suspense fund, did not give him credit for £876 13s. 9d., which has nothing whatever to do with that fund, but I gave him credit for £7015 11s. 7d. and £1647 4s. 8d.; the sum of £7015 11s. 7d. is the balance of the sum of £7015 12s. 9d. received on the 13th and the 27th of March, 1854; the sum of £251 1s. 11d. consisted of sums not received by Hollinworth but by me; I have given him credit for the sum of £876 13s. 9d. having drawn it out of suspense and paid into revenue; the sum of £876 13s. 9d. consisted of moneys in his hands which would have gone into the iron chest had Mr. Macpherson been in office, and which he paid to Hollinworth on the opening of the iron chest, from moneys found in the chest; I know this only from the entry in Hollinworth's handwriting; I can vouch for the correctness of the books; I know that it is not correct.

Mr. Roberts objected to such evidence, having regard to the manner in which the accounts were kept; if not hearsay, it was tantamount to hearsay evidence; the witness had been kept by him, not being present at the time the chest was opened.

The Bench did not approve of the course.

Examination resumed: I have made the entries in the cash per post book in reference to the £171 10s. are in Hollinworth's handwriting; the deficiency of £1627 4s. 8d. shown by entries in Hollinworth's handwriting; the entry in Hollinworth's writing in reference to the £171 10s. is manifestly a false entry—no such sum has ever been paid into suspense.

By Mr. Roberts: I refer to the cash per post book; I find, under date of 19th September, 1855, an entry of £16 14s. 11d.; part of £22 4s. 11d. was paid into suspense; it was received as one sum into the Treasury, and by Hollinworth—£10 in cash, and the remainder by cheque; the sum of £16 14s. 11d. still remains in suspense; but it was credited to the territorial revenue on the 3rd October, 1855; the suspense account does not appear to have been operated upon at all in reference to that item; there are other instances of the same thing that would most probably happen by Hollinworth paying it from cash in hand, or perhaps from his own pocket; on 18th March, 1856, a sum of £732, received from a prisoner named Ramsay, was received from the Inspector-General of Police, and on the 27th, on the opening of the suspense account, was carried to that account, and remained there until the 9th March; 1856, when it was drawn out in the usual way, and placed to another account; cannot say by whom the paper relating to it was signed.

By the Bench: This sum did not form any portion of the £7015 11s. paid into the suspense on the opening of the account; the account had been paid into the Bank before the account was commenced.

By Mr. Roberts: The sum of £22 4s. 11d. was received in two sums, and credited to the revenue in twelve months; one of which, the first, was commenced, £210 1s.;" £2 12s. drawn from suspense, and £1616 4s. 11d. credited to the revenue, but not drawn from suspense; I know of no other sum of £22 4s. 11d. received in money and the revenue account; in making up the accounts I have not discovered a sum of £110 to the credit of suspense which I cannot account for; I have not discovered a sum of £330 in suspense which does not appear in the cash per post book; I do not know of what it consisted; I cannot they know. Mr. Macpherson may have taken a portion of £7015 11s. 7d. was made up; from the 13th to 27th March he had in his hands that amount and £875, and considerably more; he could have had upwards of £1000 in his hands that period; I am aware that Hollinworth has transferred from suspense to the revenue amounts exceeding by £7 the sum of £7015; the sum of £416 16s. 7d. and two others of £1 each are yet in suspense, which ought to have been drawn out.

post book, March 18, 1854, and find an entry of £20 12s. 9d. in the suspense account, the public revenue, £1 2s. 3d. which I have formed a portion of the £7015 1s. 11d., as it was not credited to the revenue until the 30th; it does not appear to have been drawn out of suspense; it is credited to the revenue on the 24th March; on reference to the cash per post book I find the following entries of receipts:—

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

Memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of the Police Districts of Deniliquin, Moama, Moulamein, and Balranald, and the Pastoral Districts of the Lower Darling and Albert.

Showeth—1. That your memorialists have to deplore the many and grievous inconveniences they have to pay at the public in three districts, in the attempts made to prosecute parties suspected and accused of crime.

2. That your memorialists solve in consequence of the very long distance which the Courts of Assize and of Quarter Sessions are held, viz., in the town of Goulburn.

3. That Goulburn is distant from Deniliquin 400 miles, from Moama 450 miles, from the Moulamein 470 miles, from Balranald 500 miles, and the outlying portions of the police districts above named are proportionally further from Goulburn than these townships.

4. That the journey to Goulburn to carry out the laws against criminals committed for trial prove seriously and oftentimes ruinously expensive to prosecutors and witnesses in these districts, and that in the majority of cases the parties will not prosecute, and quietly submit to being robbed and murdered, rather than incur the expense which thus undergo the perils and expense of a journey to Goulburn to prosecute.

5. That there are now residing in these districts about 4000 persons.

6. That in this great extent of country, in a population so scattered, and so badly disposed, persons secrete themselves, some of whom are charged with the highest crimes against life and property, and that they are assisted by characters, who for a long time eluded justice, have been apprehended here.

7. That in the preliminary judicial investigations before the various Benches of magistrates, your memorialists have discovered on many occasions an utter indifference on the part of prosecutors and witnesses to give direct evidence against accused parties, in consequence of the long attendance on a journey to Goulburn; therefore this obstacle has a demoralizing influence, inasmuch as the truth is often on oath denied or evaded.

8. That not only do these evils entail great expenses on private persons as prosecutors and witnesses, but the public also suffer heavily, inasmuch as parties summarily convicted before the Bench of Magistrates in these districts, are enormous cost.

9. That in consequence of the continuance of these evils, for many years past there has been a growing discontent in the minds of many of the well-disposed; that this discontent has extended to too many areas to allow of confidence in the Government of New South Wales, as at present constituted, because the dissatisfied consider that their wrongs are totally disregarded, and that they do not enjoy that protection to which, as British subjects, they are entitled.

10. That your memorialists, and those who share in this discontent, they do not participate in the dissaffection, because they are satisfied that your honorable House has the power and will do justice to all classes, however remote from the seat of Government.

11. That your memorialists have looked with undisguised pleasure on the prospective of Responsible Government in the colony, in the certain hope that the evils of which your memorialists now so loudly complain will receive speedy attention and proper remedies be forthwith applied.

12. That Deniliquin is distant from Moama 50 miles, from the Moulamein 70 miles, from Balranald 130 miles, from Darlon 150 miles, and from the extreme boundary of New South Wales in this direction 270 miles.

13. That the whole of the Billabong district, extending to the Murumbidgee and up the river last named, and down a large portion of the Murray, and Darling, and Lachlan, are within easy distance of Deniliquin; that therefore your memorialists submit to your honorable House, that Deniliquin is admirably and centrally situated for the purpose of holding superior Courts of Justice, and that the local advantages far outweigh those offered by any other town in the district.

Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that your honorable House will, with all reasonable despatch, sanction the establishment at Deniliquin of Courts annually criminal and civil jurisdiction.

THE UNDERSIGNED having received the appointment of Agents for the Australasian Steam Navigation Company at Brisbane and Ipswich, intends early in April to open establishments at each of these places as a General Commission and Agency, and to solicit the support of all those connected with the Northern District, and of the mercantile community of the colonies and elsewhere.

GEORGE D. REES.

WALKER AND JONES, Watchmakers and Jewellers, 538, George-street, beg most respectfully to call the attention of the public to their Extensive and Superior Stock of first-class Gold and Silver Watches, both hunting and open-face, manufactured by John Walker, 43, Princes-street, London, inventor and improver of the Patent Railway Guards Watch, by appointment to the London and North Western, Great Northern, Lancashire and South Wales, Chester and Holyhead, Birmingham and Glasgow, Great Western, Great Southern, Great Indian Peninsula, and India, Madras, Grand Trunk of Canada, and Marseilles and Avignon Railways. Amongst the stock is a considerable gold gopher watches, with compensation balance, timed to the greatest nicety both in the extremes of temperature and in all positions which a watch is liable to. W. and J., as practical watchmakers, have great confidence in recommending these watches to the notice of those gentlemen who require a perfect time-keeper, and at the same time beg to impress upon them that, owing to their Mr. Walker being related to the above celebrated watchmaker, they are enabled to supply them without any advance upon London Prices.

MESSRS. THOMAS BARKER and CO. are buyers of good medical wines, for which they will give the highest market price. Steam Mills, Sussex-street.

FEES.

Five pounds per quarter, to be paid in advance.

Books and stationery are supplied, and charged at the least possible cost.

ADMISSION.

Application to be made either personally, before 9 a.m. or by letter, addressed to the Rev. GEORGE P. M'ARTHUR, Parsonage, St. Mark's.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.

Notice of the intended removal of any pupil is not required, although it is very desirable.

In connexion with St. Mark's Collegiate School, Alexandria.

The Rev. GEORGE P. M'ARTHUR receives a limited number of Private Boarders, into the house at St. Mark's Parsonage; where, whilst all the advantages of a private home, in the healthiest suburb of Sydney, is enjoyed, a system is diligently adhered to, and guided and watched by their admission to the Classes of the St. Mark's Collegiate School.

FEES FOR PRIVATE BOARDERS.

For boarders resident during vacations, £50 per annum.

For boarders non-resident during vacations, £60 per annum.

These fees are exclusive of the St. Mark's Collegiate School fees, and are payable quarterly in advance.

REQUIREMENTS.

Each boarder must bring with him two white counterpanes, three pairs of sheets, three pillow cases, three blankets, one pillow, six towels, together with an ample supply of such clothing as will enable him at all times to maintain his appearance as a young gentleman.

Each article of clothing and bedding must be clearly marked with the boarder's name in full.

SERVANTS FOR THE COUNTRY.—There are now in Sydney, Sailors, Shepherds, Farm Servants, and Young Women with children, who would make excellent servants to families where the children would not be objected to.

The notice is particularly addressed to persons on farms and in the interior, it being presumed that the addition of a child to such families would not be great an inconvenience as to those in Sydney.

All particulars may be ascertained by application (either personally or by letter) to the Assistant Secretary, at his office at the Asylum.

ATHMA, and its attendant evils, and why we endure them.—The first many know to their hearts' content, but why they endure them they know not. This is the reason they have tried every remedy that is considered serviceable, and found no relief whatever to their sufferings—they have endured sleepless nights and wretched days for the same obvious cause; but if the sufferer were only made aware that the boxes of Holloway's celebrated Pills, the change would certainly ensue, and please them, as it is an almost incredible fact that these Pills cure symptoms of the most distressing character, even where the sufferers have considered themselves beyond human aid. Holloway's Ointment should, however, be rubbed into the chest night and morning to assist the action of the pills. Sold at the establishment of Professor Holloway, 244, Strand (near Temple Bar), London, and 80, Maiden-lane, New York; also, by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicines throughout the civilized world, and in all parts of America, at the following prices:—1s. 3d., 3s. 3d., and 5s. each pot. ☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. HANKS and COMPANY,
Wynyard-square and George-street, opposite the Markets, March 18th.

HANKS and COMPANY, No. 313, George-street, opposite the Markets, are offering unusual advantages to dealers in teas and others, who are disposed to lay in a stock of groceries, which are being offered considerably under prime cost. Liabilities and engagements of a peculiar character have compelled the necessity for this sacrifice, advantages offered, let it be distinctly understood, are for a limited period. Call at our Stands, as well as the public at large, to participate in this heavy and severe sacrifice; but must impress on them the fact that it is cash, or cash only that can enable the Tea Warehouse, to act as our object is gained, we shall resume our ordinary rates—hence the necessity for early decision. Australian Tea Mart, 313, Pitt-street.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.—To the Cash buyer of Groceries, &c.—The premises, No. 7, Wynyard-street, Wynyard-square, must positively be cleared out in a few days.

We again remind the trade, country storekeepers, and made of families, who are always ready to take advantage to avail themselves of an early opportunity, are it be too late.

Every article will be submitted at a considerable decline on original cost, in order to effect a clearance at as early a date as possible.

Country orders, enclosing a remittance, will be faithfully executed, with every advantage guaranteed as though a personal inspection took place.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT SALE.

DEVINE'S LAND, AT NEWTOWN.

TITLE—Unquestionable.

TERMS—At Sale.

MORT and CO. have been instructed by Mr. JOHN DEVINE, to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, at 11 o'clock, on MONDAY, 12th April,

All that valuable Block of land, fronting the ERSKINVILLE ROAD, at Newtown, and bounded by the properties of Messrs. BOBBY, WILSON, and others.

It is situated in the heart of Newtown, and adjacent to the Railway, being distant only a few hundred yards from the Newtown station.

The property has been most carefully surveyed by Messrs. Langley and Taylor, and laid out in suitable allotments, each about 30 FEET FRONTAGE TO A WIDE STREET, and 100 FEET IN DEPTH. They are admirably adapted for building sites, the view from every part of the land being extensive and beautiful; and from the ease of access, the facility of obtaining water, and the nature of the soil, no pains have been spared to enhance the value of the property by making commodious allotments, so as to secure one large block.

Intending purchasers are particularly invited to inspect the property prior to sale, and to judge and satisfy themselves.

A LARGE PLAN is now in course of preparation, and will be on view at the Rooms, Pitt-street, in a few days, where also every other information respecting the property can be obtained.

 The litigation which has been pending for the last ten years has been concluded so far as regards the property now advertised, and a perfectly satisfactory and legal title will be guaranteed by the seller, Mr. John Devine.

DISTRICT OF ILLAWARRA.

LOT 1.—A GROUP OF 40 ACRES situate about 5 MILES FROM WOLLONGONG.

LOT 2.—40 ACRES in CHURCH-STREET, WOLLONGONG.

TITLE—Unquestionable.

The Imported Short-Horned Bulls, "Gleaglé" and "Crown Prince," bred by His Royal Highness Prince Albert.

DODDS and CO. have received instructions from Messrs. Solomon, Vindin, and Co., to sell by auction, on their premises, High-street, West Maitland, on MONDAY, the 12th April, at 12 o'clock,

"Gleaglé" and "Crown Prince," two very handsome pure-bred Durham bulls, about 18 months old.

These, essentially pure-blood Durham bred animals are both of a rich roan colour, in splendid condition, and were selected from the herd of Prince Albert, whose deep interest and high regard for the Durham breed, and the improvement of cattle stock is universally known and appreciated. The above bulls are descended from the best blood in England. They were shipped by the Omar Pasha, and have come out without the slightest indication of having suffered the sl

PARLIAMENT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

THURSDAY, APRIL 1.

THE PRESIDENT took the chair at eighteen minutes past four o'clock.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The PRESIDENT announced that he had received an official communication notifying the resignation of Mr. Christine Dickinson as a member of the Legislative Council.

CORRECTION OF AN INFORMALITY.

The PRESIDENT announced that in consequence of the taste resolving from the dissolution of Parliament, an informality had occurred in connection with the Treasury Bills Bill, the royal assent to which had been reported to the House on the previous day. The bill had not in fact been transmitted back to that House, so that the Clerk of the Council might place upon it the number and the date of Parliament, and the assent, and it was therefore so far informal. He suggested that some hon. member should move that the Clerk be authorised to place on the bill the proper number and the date of the assent.

A motion was then moved by the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, seconded by Sir ALFRED STEPHEN, and carried, to the effect that the Clerk be authorised to affix to the bill the number and date.

THE STEBONHEATH.

Mr. WISE, in pursuance of notice, asked the hon. the Solicitor-General, "Whether Mr. Rowland, the surgeon-superintendent of the Stebonheath, has received, any and what payment for his services on board that ship, and whether any and what steps have been taken by the Government to procure his appearance to answer the charges that have been made against him?"

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL said that, in replying to the question put by the hon. member, it would perhaps be more convenient to take the latter portion of the question first. Immediately on the arrival of the Stebonheath an official enquiry was instituted by the Immigration Board, and the result was that after four fourth day's investigation, a progress report was made to the Government requesting authority for the Criminal Crown Solicitor to prosecute the surgeon for the charge of cruelty he had been guilty of to the two girls Loughborough and Jackson. The Government approved of the recommendation, and instructed the Crown Solicitor accordingly, and he took the necessary steps in the matter. Informations were laid on the 16th March, 1858, by the girls Ellen Loughborough and Henrietta Jackson against Dr. Rowland, for assaults committed upon them on the high seas. Summonses were granted returnable on the 30th day following at the Water Police Office. The summonses were served at Dr. Rowland's residence, in Jamison-street, the landlady of the lodging house informing the serving constable that Dr. Rowland lodged there; that his luggage was there, and that he had not settled his bill. Dr. Rowland did not appear, however, and the warrants were issued against him—one of which was placed in the hands of the Metropolitan Police, the other in the hands of the Water Police; but as yet Dr. Rowland had not been arrested. Indeed, he regretted to say that there were strong grounds for believing that he had made away with himself, as he had no means whatever of leaving the country. As to payment, he was able at once to state that none whatever had been made either to surgeon or to matron; and he could further say that none would be made—the Government was fully satisfied that payment was deserved. He would add, that the papers of the ship were at present detained, and would be until the Government had obtained sufficient information to enable it to decide what ulterior measures should be taken with respect to the bill. He had now, he trusted, replied satisfactorily to the question put to him. If, however, there was any other information required, he should be happy to afford it.

Mr. WISE said the question had been answered satisfactorily as far as the terms of it went, but he hoped that copies of the report alluded to, together with the evidence taken, would be laid upon the table of the House. Great excitement naturally prevailed out of doors in reference to this ship—and this would be increased by the statements made to-night, that all the efforts made had been ineffectual in securing Mr. Rowland and bringing him to justice for the acts he had committed.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL did not believe the report or evidence were yet printed, but he fully admitted the desirability of their being published, and on his communicating with his hon. friend the Colonial Secretary, he had no doubt they would at once be laid upon the table of the House.

DISTRICT COURTS BILL.

In pursuance of notice the SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved for leave to bring in a bill for establishing District Courts and for enabling the Judges thereof to act as Chairmen of Quarter Sessions. He would state for the information of the House, that the bill with one single alteration was the same as that which had undergone so much consideration during the last session of Parliament. Should leave now be granted to bring in the bill, he should of course move that it be read a first time, and he proposed then to ask the House to make the second reading an order of the day for this day week. He was most anxious that the bill should pass into a law as speedily as possible, and he hoped that all discussion would be considered superfluous in a measure which had already occupied four sessions in other terms thirty-six hours in discussing.

Mr. WISE inquired whether the alteration alluded to was the admission of the evidence of wives.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL replied in the negative.

Leave having been given, the bill was brought in and read a first time, and ordered to be printed and placed on the orders for a second reading for Wednesday next.

REGISTERED INSTRUMENTS.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved for leave to bring in a bill for the better preservation of registered instruments. He explained that this was the same bill that was before the House last session, and was introduced with the concurrence and at the suggestion of the Registrar-General, in consequence of the danger which existed of the records of the Supreme Court becoming obliterated in consequence of the effect of the climate of this country upon parchment; and it was proposed to substitute paper, which was not likely to be so injuriously affected.

Leave having been granted, the bill was read a first time, and ordered to be printed, and placed on the Orders of the Day for its second reading on Thursday next.

INSPECTOR OF FLOUR, &c.

On the motion of Sir ALFRED STEPHEN, Dr. Douglass' motion for leave to bring in a bill to enable the Government to appoint an inspector of flour and other articles of food used for daily consumption in the city of Sydney, was postponed until Wednesday next, in consequence of the absence of the honorable member.

DESERTED WIVES AND CHILDREN.

Sir ALFRED STEPHEN moved for leave to bring in a bill for the amendment of the law regarding the maintenance of deserted wives and children. The bill, he said, was the same in substance as that which was before the Council last session, and which had previously been introduced into the other House, and when sent up to this House, had lapsed in committee, in consequence of the prorogation of Parliament.

Leave having been given, the bill was brought in and read a first time, and ordered to be read again on Wednesday next.

The Council then adjourned till Wednesday next.

INDIAN MUTINY RELIEF FUND.—The Committee met by appointment at 4 p.m., yesterday, 19 members being present. Mr. Charles Kemp consented to act as Honorary Secretary, and the Committee felt that he authorised to employ such clerical assistance as might be deemed necessary. Several names were added to the committee list. A draft of a circular drawn up by the sub-committee named on Wednesday, was submitted and put under careful deliberation, and the Hon. Secretary was authorised to get it printed as early as possible. Dr. Woolley suggested the question of how much was proposed to be raised by the fund. Mr. Jones, M.L.A., thought at least £10,000. Mr. Kemp was of opinion that any less amount would be a sham. On the recommendation of the Rev. Mr. Cuthbertson, each Monday was appointed for sending in subscription lists, with a view to their publication on the following day. It was further resolved that all such lists should be attested by the signature of either the Hon. Secretary (Mr. Kemp), or the Treasurer (Mr. Ingelow), and that a notice should be inserted in the papers to that effect. The meeting adjourned at half-past 5, until 4 p.m., on Tuesday next.

REGISTRATION.—We have heard that the importance of the Registrar-General's department is likely to meet with greater consideration than heretofore, and that one of the chief officers of the sister establishment of Victoria, which is on a very extensive scale, is shortly to be in Sydney, probably with a view of ostensibly persons here of the importance of the registration laws.

The Treasury, Sydney, New South Wales, 1st April, 1858. R. CAMPBELL, Treasurer.

THE REV. JAMES WATKINS.—A correspondent informs us that his rev. gentleman, who, during his residence in the Windsor Circuit, has laboured with much zeal and acceptance, left Windsor on Wednesday morning, last for his new sphere of usefulness at Wollongong. His circuit extended from Bird's Farm on the one hand, to St. Alban's on the M'Donald River upon the other, to every part of which he made it his earnest endeavour to do justice. Pending his departure, testimonials of esteem and respect were forwarded to Mr. Watkins from all parts of the circuit, and it must have been to him a source of peculiar gratification to find that his ministrations were so universally appreciated: the testimonial movement not being confined to the Wesleyan body alone, but joined in by pastors and people of nearly all Christian denominations in the district. His successor is the Rev. W. J. Davis, lately a missionary in the Friendly Islands.

ACCIDENT.—At Dr. Warren was visiting a patient in Palmer-street, Mrs. Warren and child in the gig; the horse's reins became entangled in the blinkers, and he started off at full speed, and upset the gig with great violence on the pavement in William-street. The head of the gig being up at the time providentially enabled Mrs. Warren and the child to escape with not slight injury, through the prompt and kind assistance of the persons present.

GOULBURN CIRCUIT COURT.

TUESDAY, 30TH MARCH.

BEFORE MR. Justice Therry.

(SUMMING UP.)

The prisoner, Michael Ryan, was indicted for that he, on the 19th of May, 1857, at Goolee, did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder John Keenan.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and was defended by Mr. Butler; attorney, Mr. Walsh.

Mr. Isaacs stated the case to the jury.

From the evidence of Edward English it appeared that he was a resident at Goolee, and was an acquaintance of Keenan, the accused. On the 19th of May he was at work, when he received a message from his wife; he went home and found the deceased in his house, sitting on a stool, with his head hanging down between his legs. He spoke to him, and told him that he had better come over to Hanley's public house with him; the deceased could only nod his head in reply; witness assisted deceased to walk half-way across, when he fell; with the assistance of Renshaw, he was carried into the public house, and was dead within ten minutes; witness could not say whether he was dead or not when he was placed on the bed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Butler: The deceased was suffering from dark scurvy and syphilis, and was a very helpless poor creature.

Catherine English, wife of the last witness: Prisoner came to my house and asked for a drink; I gave it to him, and he sat on the edge of the table; the deceased then came in; missing my child, I left the house to look for it, and was away about ten minutes; on my leaving, they were talking quietly; on my return, I saw prisoner going away from the house; on my going in, I found deceased sitting on a stool, with his head between his knees, like as if he was in a faint; I sent for my husband; he came in and spoke to him and took him away to Mr. Hanley's; on their way there, the deceased fell, and I saw Renshaw come and assist in carrying him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Butler: Deceased answered my husband when spoke to him; he was sitting on the same seat, and in the same position as when I left the house.

Thomas Renshaw, lives at Goole, on 19th of May I was at Hanley's, and was called on by English to assist him in carrying deceased into the house; we put him on a bed; I cannot say whether he was alive or dead when we placed him there; I went to the kitchen in about ten minutes; the servant girl came for a looking glass to place before his mouth to ascertain if he was dead; I returned to the room and found him dead; the next day I washed the body and laid it out for burial; I noticed a lump of the size of an egg under the left ear, and a bruise on his side, and I saw him bruised; nine or ten days after I was present at exhumation of the body; a post mortem examination was made.

Cross-examined by Mr. Butler: Dr. Morgan was present when the body was exhumed and made the post mortem examination he opened the body and skin; the day I was laying out the body I saw the marks; all his left side was turning black.

Ann Brown, wife of Hanley's public-house on 19th May last; knew deceased, remembers his death; I had a conversation with prisoner in the kitchen; the second very much terrified; he said, "I fear, what do you think, little Connaught Jack has been at Big Neil's, and given me cheek; I hit him under the ear, and knocked him down; I left him there; I saw him again after deceased was brought into the house; Elizabeth Watts came into the kitchen to borrow a big glass, and she wanted it to see whether Connaught Jack was dead; I went into the room, and saw he was dead; there was a lump under his left ear as large as an egg; the prisoner came in; I said Ryan, you have killed this man, and I fear you will be hung; I wish certain which I said; prisoner said, oh, Brown, he is not dead, he is only asleep, cover him over, and let him sleep; I said he is dead in that case; sleep that he will never wake again; next day I saw the body, and my attention was attracted to it by the blow first; on the Sunday week after I saw the body, it was black as if caused by the toe of a boot; from the time of prisoner telling me that he struck deceased until the third day was about 48 hours.

Cross-examined by Mr. Butler: The mark might have been caused by a thrust of a stick, or a fall on the edge of a stone; I did not mention this mark at the first examination, but I did so at the second occasion, nine or ten days afterwards.

Elizabeth Watts, sworn: On the 19th May; saw deceased that morning two hours before his death; he was then in as good health as I had seen him for years, but he never was well; I saw him after this death, a lump under the left ear; on lifting him into the coffin noticed a bruise on the left side.

Cross-examined by Mr. Butler: The deceased had a bad fall from his horse some years before, and was never well after it.

Elizabeth Watts, homesaid at Hanley's, recollects the deceased being brought there on the 19th May, and his death within ten minutes after; saw the prisoner at Goolee that day, and did not see him after.

Edward Shannon, lives at Goolee; on the 19th of May had a conversation with the prisoner; asked him if anything wrong in front of the house; he said "he and Little Jack had a few words and he gave him a bit of a knock;" I then went into the house and saw the dead body of Keenan; noticed a lump under the left ear; I saw him alive in the morning, he was then as well as ever saw him; when I came out I left deceased and Keenan was dead; he said not at all, it is impossible; he then went into the room to look at the body; I never saw him afterwards until he was in custody a short time ago.

Dr. Waugh: From the evidence I have heard in this case I am of opinion that it is possible the blow under the ear caused death.

Mr. Butler addressed the jury at some length to the effect that there was no case of murder against the prisoner, and that the evidence would not sustain a charge of manslaughter.

Mr. Isaacs withdrew the capital charge, but stated there was sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict of manslaughter.

The Judge read over the notes taken during the trial, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter. Sentence; imprisonment with hard labour in Parramatta gaol for six months.

NOTE.—Subsequently to the trial, the prisoner, Thomas Lennane, was indicted for that he on the 2nd February, 1858, at Mummell, did feloniously steal one mare, the property of George Evans.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and was defended by Mr. Blake; attorney, Mr. Walsh.

Mr. Isaacs stated the case to the jury, and called George Evans, Henry Mitchell, and Henry Greig.

From the evidence of Evans, it appears that he is a carrier residing at Mummell, and two years back purchased the chance of a black mare which was running with his horses, branded W M 8 sideways on near shoulder, had one shoe on the near forehand, and was on now; gave William Hayes £5 for her; never saw her from the time of purchase until I saw her in the possession of the police three weeks ago; she is now outside the Court, and is my property.

Henry Mitchell's evidence was to the same effect as to identity; the mare is outside the Court in the same.

Henry Greig, auctioneer, Goulburn: Prisoner brought me a black mare for sale on 2nd February last, branded W M 8 sideways on near shoulder; the mare outside the Court is the same; I paid the proceeds of her sale; she brought £5 10s.

Mr. Blake submitted that the prisoner was entitled to an acquittal, as the law said that Henry Mitchell and Whitelaw that after the loss of a horse for six months from the robbery the prisoner was not competent to account for the possession of the mare; there was no evidence of transfer from Hayes, the seller, to Evans.

The Judge summed up shortly, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty.

Remanded for sentence.

ROBBERY WITH WOUNDING.

The prisoner, James Gallagher, was indicted for that he on the 14th July, 1857, at Mountain Creek, did feloniously steal one horse, the property of one Thomas Keevil.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and was defended by Mr. Butler.

Mr. Isaacs stated the case to the jury, and called Thomas Keevil, Edward Antill, and Sergeant Partington.

From the evidence of Keevil, it appeared that he resides at the Mountain Creek, and in July last he had a chesnut horse—white face, white off hind foot and long tail, branded T. L. on near shoulder; in consequence of information he went to Mr. Antill and described the horse. Edward Antill, resident at Moreton, bought four horses from prisoner on the 30th June; one was a large chesnut horse, with a white face. The last witness identified a horse to be his, and I recognised this by his description; Keevil said nothing to me about white hind foot; the chesnut horse prisoner sold me was branded T, with something supposed to be a D, it looked like an altered brand; I sold the horse to Hatch, at Melbourne; I paid prisoner for the horse, and he gave me a receipt. Sergeant Partington arrested the prisoner on the 6th January last, at Major's Creek, read the warrant to him, when he said he had a warrant was out against him, and that he was about to go in and give himself up.

Mr. Butler was about to address the jury, when they said they had made up their minds; he, however, addressed a few words to them on the absence of Hatch, to whom the horse was sold.

Mr. Isaacs replied.

The Judge briefly summed up, and the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. The prisoner was discharged.

THE LATE CAPTAIN ASHMORE.

THERE are few of our readers, none who are old colonists, who will not join with us in regret in reading in our obituary of yesterday the name of the above mentioned venerable and respected gentleman. Although, on the whole, the career of Captain Ashmore has been a tranquil one, he has taken his part in the play of colonial life, and he has filled it honourably and well. Perhaps, of the generation of colonists of whom he was most honour, has he been gathered from amongst us, after a residence, slightly interrupted at intervals, of upwards of fifty years. Captain Ashmore was highly reputed in the mercantile marine, and even in the scientific world—as an experienced and successful navigator, and the first of his having largely assisted the celebrated Horsburgh in the compilation of his charts and descriptions of the navigation of the Southern and Eastern Seas is sufficient to give his name weight and authority in this respect. Whilst engaged in the duties and dangers of a maritime life, Captain Ashmore was a careful observer of its difficulties, and in his communications to the Nautical Magazine and other publications, rendered valuable service to his compeers and those who came after him. For many years past, however, Captain Ashmore had retired from the profession of the sea and had followed that of marine surveyor. He was not appointed one of Lloyd's surveyors, but he was constantly employed by Lloyd's agents here in that capacity, and always gave the most entire satisfaction. He was the recognised surveyor of the Australian General Steam Company, and on his retirement from the office in July last, the company unanimously awarded him a pension for life in consideration of his services. There is no merchant in Sydney who will refuse his tribute of respect to Captain Ashmore in all the relations of his professional life. His surveys were seldom even disputed; none ever questioned the equality and honour in which they were made. At home and abroad his name was received with respect, and by seamen who had visited this port, we had known him, with affection. On the news of his death being made public, the flags of all the vessels in harbour, and of the consulate offices were hoisted half-mast. The funeral of the lamented and venerable gentleman took place yesterday afternoon, and was attended by the representatives of most of the mercantile firms in the city, the captains of vessels, and by a large number of sincerely sorrowing friends.

GOLD NEWS.

WRITING from the Peel and Hanging Rock, on the 31st ultimo, the Maitland Mercury's correspondent says: Notwithstanding the rush to Boonoo Boonoo, the Peel River still continues to be the great place attaining their ground, and continue to yield remunerative wages to every one there. The long continuance of dry weather has enabled the diggers to get down the river bed, and the result has exceeded all expectations. Some of the claims in the rear of Allen's public-house have proved very rich—as an indisputable fact, the which I refer you to the nuggets now in the window of Messrs. Dickson and Co., of Maitland, two of which weighing fifty ounces, were obtained by John Wood, of Maitland Reef notoriety, and Henry Harris. Jackson's party, in the same place, have found a number of small nuggets, varying from ten to eleven ounces; and Hanley's party have also obtained several, from two to eight ounces. Another, weighing eighty-four ounces, was found in the Northern gold-fields. The success of the new local crushing machine of Mr. Amos Davis has induced that gentleman to make a further investment, and he is now in Sydney for the purpose of getting up a steam power machine, which will afford the diggers an opportunity of getting their quartz crushed without the delay experienced, and also re-open a number of claims that have been abandoned for want of the proper facilities for crushing the quartz. Great praise is due to Mr. Davis for the energetic manner he has taken in the opening of the quartz veins on the Peel River, and there is little doubt that his efforts will be crowned with pecuniary success. Gold is selling at £3 11. Wages from £3 to £5 per week.

THE ROCKY RIVER.—The Armidale Express states that the gold seekers have come on in numbers at the Rocky River. Some parties on Mount Jones were sinking. If the rain continued, the escort returns would show improvement. Provisions (rations 7s. or 8s. a load) could be saved, water being plentiful in all the holes on Sydney Flat. Deserted shafts were being taken up by returned diggers from Tenterfield.

BOONOO BOONOO.—At Boonoo Boonoo the rush had somewhat abated, notwithstanding the influx from Clarence Bay and the Clarence River. Appearances were much in favour of that locality as a gold field, but nothing definite or satisfactory had yet been obtained. Wright's party, however, are lately active at the commencement, and whose reported success had induced many to leave the Rocky River, had shifted to a spot about six miles from Tenterfield, on the direct road to Grafton, where they were said to be doing well. The probability was that the next rush would be to Sneden's Creek, the locality where that party was then situated. There was much discontent amongst the diggers, and a large number were continually leaving, but still there appeared a general impression that gold in paying quantities for the majority was deposited somewhere, though they had not yet alighted on it. Good order had so far been maintained. Letters from persons from Armidale, who had been on the way to Boonoo, mentioned the fact that numbers were met on the road returning from the diggings, though some few were still going there from the Rocky River.

INQUEST BEFORE THE CITY CORONER.

An inquest was held on Wednesday at the Town Hall, on view of the body of Thomas Reilly, a native of Ireland, aged 32, who had formerly been a prisoner in the colony when he, it was shown by marks upon his back, had gone through a deal of flogging. He was employed at the Benevolent Asylum at the beginning of February, being partially paralysed, but he was otherwise healthy, and lived on full rations. On Monday last, at about noon, he was seized without a fit, but with violent vomiting, in which he gave up about a quart of blood, and about five minutes after he died. Verdict, natural death.

An inquest was held at the Cherry Tree public-house, Castlereagh-street, on Wednesday last, on view of the body of Margaret Rawford, aged two years and three months. Her mother represented her as having been in good health all the day, and the child's age, when she began to pass away, at the same time that her sister, aged five years, was taken with violent vomiting, and the child accompanied her aunt to the Botanical Gardens on Tuesday afternoon, and was then in her usual health; she had eaten very heartily of mullet at dinner; on her return home in the evening she complained of her head, and was given some tea; the young mother took her to her arms about 7 o'clock, and left the room, adjoining a neighbour, and considering there till half-past 8 o'clock, when she found her sister unwell, and returned to her mother laid her on the sofa, where she remained till after 10 o'clock, whereupon she got in bed. Her mother went afterwards went up stairs, and perceiving an effusion small blood out that the child was dead; she had generally attended the child and washed her, and saw no bodily injuries on her genital parts, which were apparently very brittle; there was no blood on her clothes; Dr. Beaumont, of Castlereagh-street, stated a tuffus for three, composed of alum in milk and water, acting as an emetic, and from the appearance of the body on examining her externally. There was no separation from the parts, which were sounded in the parts mentioned; she had only been settling herself to sleep; but admitted that the child was of very fatigued habit; the closet she was in the habit of going to was used by the houses, and was the resort of numbers of persons. The father of the deceased child deposed that he had been in the habit of taking boys two-some away other day for twelve months past, and it had been reported with himself for the child, who was of a healthy habit, and had been subject to worms. She had fits soon after birth, but not since; she had been subject to pains in the stomach and face began to swell two hours after death, and her body became mottled and discolored; the exterior size. Elizabeth Fogg, grandmother of the deceased, and present at the death of her grandchild, deposed that she had never seen unusually wicked and false witness, or impeached the child's character as infamous monster. We hesitate to publish statements so revolting as these; but, in view of the evidence given by the coroner's constable, which declared that her unreported testimony was not to be relied on, but character as a drunkard and a cruel and fractious person, having given her maternity at the police court. Mr. Woolcock's post mortem examination of the body of the deceased child resulted in showing that, besides the external signs, certain diseased parts were found in the intestines, but that however he did not characterise as syphilitic; there was a small oval opening on the anterior surface of the rectum, from which the stomach's contents were oozing; the inner surface of the stomach was in a state of inflammation, together with ulcerated spots, the small intestines were very varicose, and contained inflammation, with ulceration; the liver was six times larger than natural size to children of the age of the deceased; the kidneys were inflammation small—the right side being gorged with black blood; the testes were large; the lungs and both were healthy; the extraneous disease of the stomach was to be accounted a sufficient cause of death, and the sudden rupture of that organ was the cause of death; the rupture that had taken place was recent, and the contents were a thick substance resembling a mixture of milk, with an cabbage, pumpkin, and fish, which mixed into the cavity of the stomach, and the stomach was distended with fecus, and the liver being large, and the stomach distended, contributed to the rupture of the walls of the stomach; the diseased state of the liver was quite sufficient to account for the disease affecting the heart (the tissues on the external genitals were not the cause of death, nor had they anything to do with it. Verdict—Effusion of coagula. The jury recommended the head judgment of a mother who could give her child food which was improper in quality and quantity.

An inquest was held yesterday at the Gas House Hotel, on view of the body of Isabella O'Toole, aged 3 years and 11 months. The deceased was the child of a labourer living in Kent-street North, and she came by her death by a dray wheel passing over her body.

PRODUCE CIRCULAR.

WOOL, a better feeling has prevailed during the week for produce for export, and the sales have consequently exhibited a greater favourable state of the exchange, and people being willing to result in produce.

At to-day's sale there was marked improvement in prices, but it is doubtful whether they will be maintained.

TALLOW.—A few parcels from the Hunter River brought to market are taking in consideration, say 60s 11s. for best; inferiors were objectionable, and 50s. 6d. to 55s. 6d. was brought for the rest.

HIDES.—More in demand, but heavy prices are with difficulty obtained.

Horse hides are rife from the boiling establishments have come to hand, and sold readily from 12s. 6d. to 13s. 6d. for best heavy—but the prices are prohibitory for home consumption—such prices are not warranted by English accounts.
